It might be pertinent to inquire to what possible use a spoon could have been put in the reindeer age, when raw meat was eaten, and when skin-bottles were the only water-vessels; yet a genuine spoon made of reindeer's horn has been discovered in the Grotto of Gourdan. It is oval, very long and quite shallow. Its handle is very elegant, being covered with engraved figures. Unfortunately, it is broken, so that it is impossible to say whether the handle was flattened. The slight depth of the spoon should not surprise us, for the men who made it knew neither soups nor sauces, and they could only have used it for the purpose of extracting the marrow from the long bones of large animals, or for eating the brains of the latter, and for such uses the depth of bowl was of small consequence. M. Piette has likewise found other well characterized spoons in deposits of the reindeer age. One of these, more delicate, narrower, deeper and less elegant than the one just mentioned, was found in one of the lowermost strata. At a still greater depth in the same deposit he came across a thick, rudely-made spoon, which appeared never to have had any handle. It was made of rough-dressed bone, with polished edges, and its shape was oval. Before the invention of such an implement as a spoon, man of the reindeer age employed the spatula; and this is found at all depths in the Gourdan and Lortet deposits. M. Garrigan discovered in the Grotto of Alliat a fragment of reindeer's horn hollowed out in its whole length, and apparently designed for holding liquids; and similar utensils were found by M. Piette at Gourdan. These, however, were probably only temporarily used as spoons, the only genuine spoons which have been discovered being those described above, and which served as models for Neolithic man, who afterward appeared on the scene.

THE SECRET OF THE PYRAMIDS.

Up to this time the mystery of the preparation of the bodies of the Egyptian dead for embalming has never been discovered; it is one of the standing marvels of the ages, how the Egyptians were enabled to preserve the bodies of their dead in such a way as to defy the "tooth of time;" but a patent has recently been taken out in Washington which the inventor claims is a real re-discovery of the Egyptian secret. But the process of embalming has no real utility. The ancient Egyptian believed in the immortality of the body, and he deemed it his religious duty to have his remains so prepared that when resuscitated, its old lineaments would reappear. The soil of Egypt to-day is packed with mummies, so much so as to seriously interfere with the labors of the agriculturist. After all, nature knows best. The perishable character of our frail bodies restores to the soil elements of fertility which it greatly needs. It is said that every atom of earth for many feet over the surface of all China must literally have passed through hundreds if not thousands of the bodies of Chinamen in the countless ages of the past. The whole earth would be a mausoleum of mummies had the process of embalming been common among all the races of men since the beginning of history.

THE VALUE OF ALLIGATORS.

The Continent tells us that six thousand baby alligators are sold in Florida every year, and the amount of ivory, number of skins, and quantity of oil abtained from the older members of the Saurian family are sufficient to entitle them to a high place among the products of the State. The hunters sell young "'gators" at $25 per hundred, and the dealer from 75 cents to $1.00 each. Live allegators two years old represent to the captor 50 cents each, and to the dealer from $2.00 to $5.00, as the season of travel is at its height or far advanced. A ten-foot alligator is worth $10, and one fourteen feet long $25 to the hunter, while the dealer charges twice or three times that price. The eggs are worth to the hunter 50 cents per dozen, and to the dealer 25 cents each.

GAMBETTA AS AN EDITOR.

Gambetta was not a brilliant writer, and he never knew when to stop. It is related that he would enter his editorial room, saying, "I shall want about half a column to-night," and sitting down, he would begin to cover page after page with his close, cramped handwriting. For so impetuous a man he wrote a curiously stiff hand, and, though his fingers moved fast, their motion was feverish and spasmodical. It could not be said of him that he "dashed off" any of his effusions; he rather jerked them off, swaying the upper part of his body ponderously to and fro as he wrote, and now and then collecting his thoughts by passing his large left hand rapidly through his hair. Black coffee would be brought him, and he would go on writing; then he would call for a bottle of Burgundy, and gulp down two or three glasses, munching sweet biscuits afterward, or else sticks of chocolate in lieu of dinner. The editor, who had been making allowances for half a column, would see Gambetta's article overflow one column after another, washing away all other articles and notes, till it spread like an inundation over the entire front page of the paper. Then with a hearty "Ouf," the French exclamation of relief, he would throw down his pen and say, "There, I think those few lines will state our case plainly; what! do they really run to five columns? Sacrebleu! it seemed to me as if I had only been writing ten minutes!" and upon this he would break into a laugh that resounded all over the office.

AN ALMOST BLACK ROSE.

At the grand display of the Horticultural Society's exhibition, held recently in New York, the prominent feature was the specimens of antheris schetzerianum exhibited by Mr. Bennett. These queer plants belong to the Arum family, and the flower resembles a fleshy, bright scarlet leaf, out of which a yellowish red worm seems to be curling. Before this odd blossom opens, the bud is like a long red pepper. There were some seven or eight of these plants, which attracted great attention. The centre table was adorned with numerous pots of cinneraria of various shades of purple and white. Near these were lilacs in pots, and some of these were iuovelties. Then came the dishes of mushrooms, black Hamburg grapes, iengthy cucumbers and tomatoes raised in forcing houses. The end of this table was covered with primroses, snowdrops and marcissuses. On the left hand table were several superb showings of hybrid perpetuals and tea roses. Peter Henderson, of Jersey City, showed some hybrid perpetuals, very interesting to amateurs. Chief of these was an almost black rose, called the Rev. H. Dombrain, which is a novelty; the pure white Coquette les Alpes, the large light red Paul Neyron, and the Fisher Holme, another dark red, but not so dark as the first named. There were many fine displays of cut flowers of every kind, especially of enormous calceolarias and cinnerarias. The exhibition was a marked success.

A STUFFED SPIRITUALISTIC HAND.

Some time ago, according to Chamber's Journal, at a spirisualistic seance—the genuine article—a fiery hand was seen waving overhead in the darkness, rushing from end to end of the room with incredible swiftness, now high, now low, and occasionally smiting people on the cheek with the cold, clammy contact of a corpse. In spite of the medium's stringent injunctions that no one should move, a gentleman clutched this awful apparition as it swept past him, and regardless of protestations and threats, refused to let it go until the lights were turned up. Then the messenger from the other world proved to be nothing more supernatural than a dirty white kid glove rubbed with phosphorus and stuffed with wet tow; at the end of a thin line, was suspended from a fishing-rod which could be reduced telescopically to a length convenient for the pocket. Thus the medium could cause all manner of appaling "manifestations" without rising from his chair.

A BOY WITH AN ALLIGATOR SKIN.

Dr. Hamilton has discovered the greatest living curiosity of the age. Those who have examined testify that it beats anything they ever saw The curiosity is in shape a natural human being, a colored boy, eighteen years of age, who was born of slave parents near Grenada, on the Mississippi River in the State of Mississppi. From his shoulders down his skin is just like that of an alligator, is thickly covered with black scales, and the whole is as pliable, though thick and tough, as the hide on one of these animals. In the summer time these scales drop off, leaving an indenture in the skin, where new ones form and grow on again. His name is Moses Eskridge, and he came here during the exodus times with his father and stepmother.—Topeka State Journal.

A BATTLE IN THE GRASS.

The Austin Dispatch gives an account of a fight between a rattlesnake and a black snake, which was recently witnessed near Fort Worth. The black snake forced the fighting, gliding around in swift circles while the rattlesnake lay coiled. The circles grew smaller, and the rattlesnake appeared confused as the black snake drew closer. His rattles ceased to give out their usual sound, and his head dropped as if vertigo was seizing him. The black snake seized, by a lightning movement, the rattler by the throat, and, winding about him, the two rolled over and over together. In a few moments the rattlesnake ceased to breathe. An examination of the dead body of the rattlesnake revealed a fracture in the spine as complete as if done by a blow with a club. The rattlesnake measured five feet and three inches.

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and other Persons liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Peabody.

The Assessors of the Town of Peabody hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that their office will be open on and after the first day of May until and including the first day of June, and all persons liable to be taxed in said town are hereby required to bring in at the said office true and perfect lists of all the polls (males twenty years old, and upward), and schedules and estimates of the personal estates for which they are liable to pay taxes.

Copartnerships

having a place of business in Peabody, and also in some other city or town within the Commonwealth, are especially notified to bring in a statement in accordance with the 24th section of the 11th chapter of the Public Statutes. Shipping and business income are not taxable to a firm, but each resident partner must include these items in his individual return.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

"Any mortgagor or mortgagee of real estate may bring in to the assessors of the town or city where such real estate lies," within the time specified in this notice, "a statement, under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagee or mortgagor. When such property is situated in two or more places, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement." [Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882]. When a statement in conformity with the law above quoted is brought in, the real estate therein returned will be assessed under sections 14, 15 and 16, of chapter 11 of the Public Statutes. But in cases where the mortgagor of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, NO STATEMENT OR RETURN IS REQUIRED from either mortgagee or mortgagor, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Estates in Trust.

Persons holding estates in trust, whether for minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of persons deceased, have been divided during the past year or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator, or other person interested, is required and warned to give notice of such change; and in default of such notice, will be held to pay the tax assessed, although such estate has been wholly distributed and paid over.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation the ed, and any one neglecting to furnish the assessors with such list within the time above specified will be deemed at a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors, agreeably to the law of the Commonwealth. All persons will take notice that statements of personal property must be in writing, and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board, NOTWITHSTANDING A VERBAL STATEMENT OR INFORMAL WRITTEN COMMUNICATION TO ANY ONE OR MORE OF THE ASSESSORS. [Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 39 and 41. When a person has failed to bring in a list or schedule of all his taxable property, in conformity to this notice, no abatement of a tax so assessed upon such person for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on personal estate, if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent. [Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 73.]

Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office.

Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.

The attention of the Officers of all Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 217 of the Acts of 1882, as the property of said corporations, both personal and real, will be subject to taxation unless the law is complied with. Blank forms for the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors.

TOWN OF PEABODY.

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.

THE Board of Health appointed by the Town hereby make and publish, as required by law,* the following "Regulations for the Public Health and Safety:"—

REGULATION 1ST. It being the duty of the Board of Health, of the Town of Peabody, to make such examination of the premises of persons residing in said town as they shall deem necessary for the public welfare, the Board hereby give notice and require that all premises within said limits shall be ready for inspection by the Board on and after June 1st, 1883.

REGULATION 2D. No house offal, filthly water, dead animals or refuse of any kind, shall be thrown upon the streets by any resident; and no butcher, fishmonger, or vender of merchandise, shall leave any refuse upon the streets of this town.

REGULATION 3D. If, upon inspection, any rubbish, offal, decaying animal or vegetable matter, or filth of any kind be found in, under or about any building, within any yard or enclosure, upon any premises, or in the ponds or water courses of said Town of Peabody, or if any privy or drain be found so discharging as to prove a nuisance, and offensive or deleterious to the public health, the owner or occupant of such property or premises shall be notified by the Board to remove or abate such nuisance within 24 hours after said notice has been served.

REGULATION 4TH. If any owner or occupant of property as aforesaid, after having been duly notified, shall neglect to comply with the requirements of the above section, the Board of Health shall cause any and all nuisances to be removed or abated at the expense of the owner or occupants.

REGULATION 5TH. No hogs or goats shall be kept within the limits of this town, except in pastures, or in enclosures kept free from standing water, and regularly and freely disinfected.

REGULATION 6TH. It shall be the duty of occupants of dwellings in which any person or persons may be sick with small pox, and Physicians attending such cases of small pox, forthwith to notify the Board of Health of the fact.

REGULATION 7TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where small pox exists, or has existed, shall prohibit and prevent the removal of clothes, bedding and upholstering, or other articles from the infected buildings or dwellings, except the removal is made by permission, or under direction of the Board of Health.

REGULATION 8TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Scarlet Fever and Diphtheria exist shall withdraw all children attending school from the same; and the teachers of said schools shall not allow children thus withdrawn to re enter the school until they shall present a certificate from the attending Physician vouching for the safety thereof.

REGULATION 9TH. Night soil carts shall not be allowed to pass through the streets in the thickly settled portions of the town between sunrise and sunset, from May 1st to Nov 1st, without a special permit from the Board of Health.

These Regulations will be Strictly Enforced.

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

IN CONSIDERING the pretensions of Gov. Butler, that the State Alms House can be run at less expense to the Commonwealth, it should be borne in mind that during the week that is past, there have occurred two events of importance. First an additional amount has been asked for, in the department of the insurance commissioner, which is now under the control of Gen. Butler's friends, and second, a sham attempt was made to cut down the appropriation for the Concord prison, after the bills were through the house, when it was known that it must lay over until next season. In this latter case, the adherents of Butler were prepared with reductions in nearly every case when the bills were introduced excepting this Concord prison, where the salaries are highest, but which is now, like the office of the insurance commissioner, in the hands of Butler's friends. There is no more reason for smaller appropriations in the one case than in the other. But these things are very significant as showing the animus of the party who are adherents of the Governor, and are apt to be forgotten.

It has been shown that dead bodies have been delivered to the Medical College by the authorities at Tewksbury, and this is admitted. But what of that? It has not been proved that it was done illegally; yet the impression which has been conveyed in the minds of many is that some terrible crime has been committed. This is not so. The law allows the bodies of paupers to be delivered for purposes of dissection, under certain conditions, which it has not been shown have been violated. This should be borne in mind by those who are ready to condemn the authorities for their action.

Another thing has been shown, that insufficient food has been given the inmates. Not in quantity or quality but in kind. Tewksbury is more of a hospital than an alms house, and the food though good enough and abundant enough for a healthy person, has lacked those little dainties which are ofttimes so necessary to the sick, but which the lack of means would not allow them to furnish. So that instead of a smaller appropriation, a larger one is really needed to carry on the work there.

We do not see how any candid person, who has followed the investigation thus far, can help admitting that Gen. Butler has failed to make out a case. Some things have been found in better condition than was expected, and what errors there were in former years had been reformed by the efficient board of State Charities. And in this connection it is interesting to read the letter of Mr. Charles F. Donnelly, a member of the Board, over whom the party whip has been cracked by the Boston Globe, because he had independence enough to have an opinion of his own—based as it was upon a knowledge of the affairs there. Mr. Donelly is an Irishman, and in reply to the insinuations that he was not mindful of the poor of his ancestry in that institution, because he did not agree with Gen. Butler that they had been illy treated, he says: "Let those with whom I have the honor to claim a common lineage rest confident the board on which I serve, and which now has the care of the wards of the State, whose treatment has been the subject of so much inquiry, has, of the nine members composing it, four of Irish parentage, namely; Ex-Governor Talbot, Congressman-elect Davis, John Fallon, Esq., of Lawrence, and the writer of this note. It is not, therefore, probable that the poor under their care will suffer at their hands. As for my action in the unfortunate controversy between the governor and the State board, while I desire to show the utmost deference to a citizen who has rendered, in the past, eminent service to the State, and whose high office commands the respect of all, yet I deem it a duty when, as a member of a public body I differ in my opinion from him in a question of law or fact, to exercise my judgment instead of yielding to his, blindly and unquestioningly, as some pliant and complaisant gentlemen would have me do in this matter."

The Selectmen in licensing our druggists to sell liquors for mechanical and medicinal purposes, have stipulated that none shall be sold while public entertainments are being held in the town, on election days and at times of fires.—Fairhaven Star.

Great Scott! So if a man is ill and some brandy is prescribed by a physician, he can't get it if it is election day, or if there is a fire in town. What are the fathers of this town thinking of? It looks very much as if the license for "mechanical and medicinal" purposes was intended both by the town and the apothecaries to mean something else in Fairhaven. But of course we must be in error. Perhaps the Star can tell us what they do mean.

IN MANY towns an organization called the Law and Order League has been formed, and been a successful aid in the enforcement of the liquor law of the state. The organization, as we understand it, seeks the enforcement of the laws, not only in regard to the sale of liquors, but in regard to the advancement of morality and good order in the town. We think a League in Peabody could do effective and valuable work—if rightly directed. It is for the interest of all good citizens to see that the laws are properly enforced, not only the town laws, but the state laws.—Chief among these, of course, is the law in relation to the sale of intoxicants. We are aware that these Leagues are not in favor with the radical prohibitory leaders—those who, because they cannot have a prohibitory law, will not help enforce any other.—But the majority of citizens are content to take things as they find them.—By a vote of the town, licenses under certain conditions of the statutes are granted in Peabody. All good citizens, whether they are in favor of a license law or not, want to see the law enforced. It should be done not only in the interest of law and order, but for the protection of those to whom licenses are granted. If the town takes a license fee from A, it should not allow B, who was not granted one, to sell liquor, perhaps on the same street. The provisions of the law should also be enforced. The sale of intoxicants on the Sabbath should be suppressed. It is done in our neighboring city of Salem; why should it not be so here? A wide awake, sensible law and order league could do much towards the encouragement of the officers in their work. It must not be a partisan affair. Persons who are not charitable enough to respect the opinions of others cannot work successfully in such an organization. But where the members, though differing on minor points, are united on the grand central points of attack, and will bury these differences in the common cause, much and radical good can be accomplished.

THE PEOPLE of Peabody will heartily congratulate the Lynn and Boston Horse Railroad on the completion and opening of the new line to this town. The connection of the two places by horse railroad has been talked of many years—and although considered merely a question of time, it has seemed a long time, especially to our friends in So. Peabody. It is therefore a matter for general rejoicing that the road is now opened—and under such favorable auspices.

We believe the patronage will be all that the road anticipate—and more. The fares are very reasonable, and the ride to Lynn especially during the summer, is a delightful one. Its convenience will be apparent in the case with which its patrons can visit the beaches in the vicinity of Lynn—Nahant beach, Nahant, and the Point of Pines. Connection will also be made with the Revere Beach R. R., the cars arriving at that depot a few moments before each hour, thus giving just time enough to get on board the cars. The road will also afford an opportunity for more frequent trips from Boston in the forenoon, than is now enjoyed on the Eastern R. R. and while the accommodations of this latter road are all that can reasonably be desired, there are times when the intervals between the trains are uncomfortable, especially in the early part of the day. There is also an opportunity to return directly to Peabody later in the evening than by the present arrangement of the Eastern R. R.

An opportunity of visiting Boston and Lynn on the Sabbath will also be afforded—without the confinement to special times as has been the case previously. Those who enjoy a retreat on the beaches on that day, during the heated term, will be afforded convenient transportation, at a trifling expense.

Unless all signs fail, also, there will be an increase of social and business intercourse between our people and Lynn. We trust this will prove advantageous to both places, and that the pleasant interchange of hospitality which was begun yesterday so auspiciously will be an augury of prosperity which shall continue through the future.

A LETTER has been published from the Superintendent of the Danvers Insane Hospital, in reference to the man who assaulted Chief Wade, in Boston, which is worthy of notice. It had been hinted that the authorities there were derelict in their duty—in discharging such a man from the Asylum. It appears that he was removed at the instance of the overseers of the poor of the town of his settlement, in order that he might be cared for at less expense. The case shows the risks which some towns will take in allowing such as he was to go at large before they are perfectly recovered. Dr. Goldsmith says: "I find a copy of a letter written to the overseers of the poor just before his removal, in answer to one telling me that they had voted to remove him with some other patients, in which I say that he 'entertains delusions that are liable to render him dangerous at any time,' and the same was stated verbally. Of his subsequent history, previous to the assault referred to, I know nothing, but if he recovered, which seems to me improbable, any expert would have thought him almost sure again to become insane and dangerous, because his history was that of a hard drinker, and his form of disease such as is often induced and aggravated by drink."

Yesterday was a day long to be remembered by our citizens—signalized by the opening of the line of Horse Railroad, between this town and our neighboring city of Lynn. The track was completed last week, and yesterday afternoon a trial trip was made over the road by the directors, the Selectmen of Peabody, representatives of the press and other citizens. A new car drawn by four horses started from the office in Lynn shortly after three o'clock. The party included the Hon. Amos F. Breed, president of the road; the Hon. S. M. Bubier, Aldermen Beckford, Hayes and Smith, ex-Alderman Aza A. Breed, D. H. Sweetser, Esq., Col. A. G. Shepherd, Mr. John L. Shorey, P. A. Chase, M. V. B. Mower, Lyman B. Frazier, Treasurer E. F. Oliver, and Superintendent E. C. Foster. Shortly after four o'clock the party arrived at the Square, and as the gaily decorated car, followed also by another one belonging to the company, drove up, a large concourse of our citizens had assembled. The car is one of four new cars being built for the company, for use on this extension. They are painted in bright colors, the words "Peabody Square" being very prominently placed on the front. They are nicely upholstered, and are as fine cars as are in use anywhere on the road. The President and directors alighted at the Square, were introduced to many of our citizens, who bade them a cordial welcome to our town, when after some time spent in conversation, the Selectmen, invited guests from our town, and representatives of the local press, entered the special car, while those of the Lynn party who could not find room there were conveyed in the other car. The party from this town consisted of Messrs. S. A. Southwick, Levi Preston, Nathan H. Poor, John E. Herrick, Thomas J. Relihan, members of our Board of Selectmen; George F. Sanger, chairman of the Overseers of the Poor; Stephen Blaney, Henry Wardwell, Charles E. Brown, George Randall, B. F. Stevens, B. D. Hill, reporter for the Boston Globe, Chas. Archer, of Salem, reporter for the Boston Advertiser, Thos. H. McGrath, of the Reporter, Chas. C. Hills, Peabody Correspondent of the Salem News, Chas. D. Howard, of the Salem Post, and the representative of the PRESS. Very nearly 4.30 P. M., the party left the Square, and proceeded over the route. The track was found to be in good condition, the rain of the previous night having laid all the dust, though the track was a little soft in some places. A few days travel, however, will remedy this. Much enthusiasm was manifested along the route, especially as the cars went through South Peabody, the people coming to the doors, clapping their hands, and in other ways manifesting their approval and welcome. No stop was made until the stables were reached, when the party alighted and visited the well arranged and commodious accommodations for the horses of the company. Here they have accommodations for seventy-five horses. An addition of about 15 new stalls is being built in the rear, and fifteen horses from the Revere stables will be brought down to this end. The company own in all about 500 horses. The location of the stable, near the water, is very desirable, there being plenty of air and good ventilation for the horses. After the party had viewed these premises, cars were again taken and continued to Lynn proper, and to Nahant beach. Here the old hotel which is situated at the entrance, has been almost entirely rebuilt, and the result is a commodious establishment with large and airy rooms. The horse cars of this road run directly to the portico of the hotel, and during the summer travel arrangements will be made for transfer to this route from Lynn without extra charge. The party remained here some time, being welcomed cordially by the proprietor, who was evidently surprised at being so taken by storm, but who in a genial manner took them all over the house. The party then returned to Lynn, and to the fine residence of Hon. A. F. Breed, the president of the road, where an ample collation had been prepared. After justice had been done to the repast, the cars were in readiness to convey the party back to Peabody—one and all expressing their thanks for the cordial manner in which they had been treated, and with good wishes for the success of the road.

To-day regular trips will be commenced on the road, as per time-table which is published in another column. On week days the cars will leave the Square at 6.10 A. M., 7.05, and every hour thereafter until 9.05 P. M., on Sundays at 8.05 A. M. and every hour until 9.05 P. M.; on week days a car will leave at 10 P. M., running to Wyoma only, and at 10.05 and 11 P. M. on Sundays. From Lynn the cars will leave Central Depot at 7 A. M., and every hour thereafter until 9 P. M.; Sundays at 9 A. M., and every hour until 10 P. M. In addition cars will leave Wyoma stable at 5.35 A. M., week days, and 7.35 A. M. Sundays. The fare on the road to Lynn will be twelve cents for single tickets, and at the rate of ten cents where tickets are bought. The local fare in Peabody, anywhere this side of the Lynn line, will be six cents, or at the rate of five cents where tickets are sold. And for this local fare any of the Boston tickets, either the Metropolitan, South Boston, Highland or Charlestown Cars, will be accepted by the Lynn road.

PEABODY.

Two places on Harris street, whose proprietors were doing a rum business without a license last year, have closed up their places in anticipation of a more strict enforcement of the law.

Our local dealers are preparing their soda fountains for the delightful summer drinks, and some day probably next week will give all their customers and the public a "free blow."

Ed. Lawson living on Walnut street, was surprised by a party of his friends at his boarding house last Friday evening, and was presented with a gold ring. A pleasant evening was passed.

A horse belonging to a Mr. Driscoll of Salem, was attacked with a fit on the Square last Thursday afternoon. He was carried to the stable of Mr. Charles Symonds and cared for.

Wm. F. Sumner has been elected Quartermaster of Union Post 50, G. A. R., in place of Mr. E. C. Spofford, resigned. Mr. S. has filled that position before, as also that of commander.

Readers, look out for a fraud who began to work this town Monday, selling what he claims to be a solid gold ring, marked 18k. They are brass, with only a light plating of gold. Beware.

"Charlie" the barber, took his first ride in the horse cars yesterday with the party that inspected the road, but when he reached Wyoma, he thought he would wait there for the return car.

Mrs. Martha Cann was considerably injured on Elm street, last Friday evening, by being tripped up by a piece of twine tied across the side walk by some mischief loving boys. This is dangerous pastime and serious accidents are liable to result. Don't do it "some more," boys.

Until yesterday the roads were terribly dusty and the earth dry and parched, but the rain of yesterday did lots of good, and we have been asked to petition for more. We hereby petition.

A beautifully lifelike crayon portrait of the three children comprising the family of Mr. D. P. Grosvenor is on exhibition at Frank Cousins' Bee-Hive, Salem. Cross is the photographer and artist.

Waltham, Natick, Marlboro and other towns are considering whether it is advisable to open their public libraries on Sunday.—Milford Gazette. That is a subject that could well be considered by Peabody.

Mrs. Hannah Beckett received a paralytic shock, which resulted in her death last Sunday. She was 70 years of age. She resided on Tremont street with her daughter, the wife of officer Geo. Jones.

Chas. Odell the auctioneer will sell at public auction on Tuesday, May 29th, the large tannery on the corner of Oak and Winter streets. For a description of the property read advertisement in another column.

The beautiful display of tulips on the lawns of Mrs. J. B. Clement, on Park street, attracts a large share of public attention. They speak well for the care they receive from Richard Hurley, the gardener.

A new street has been cut through the Poor estate from Tremont to North street, and also one from Sutton to Shillaber street. A new house will soon be erected on the latter street by Mr. George Shove.

Dudley Davis the fish monger, who was run into by the cars while crossing the Eastern Railroad track at Jacobs street some time ago, has brought suit against the road which will be tried at the June term of the court.

A workman while at work on the new horse railroad last Sunday, had his foot severely injured by an iron bar. He was taken to the drug store of Hazen Spaulding, and the wound dressed. He was afterwards carried home.

The organization of the Chorus Choir intended by the Musical committee of the South Church, is not yet arranged. One rehearsal has already been held, and another will be held to-morrow evening. It is possible that there will be quartette singing for several Sabbaths to come.

Edward Kavanagh, Jr., the assistant in the drug store of Daniel P. Grosvenor, has obtained a position in Boston, with John Lakin & Co., corner of Boylston and Tremont street, and entered upon his duties last Monday.

We understand that a number of licensed liquor dealers are decidedly adverse to complying with the recent order of the selectmen in relation to the closing of the back doors. But those are orders, and they mustn't kick.

Two strolling musicians of the "veteran" persuasion, both being supplied with crutches, entertained all who listened last Monday as they sang pathetic ballads and war songs on our streets. They reaped quite a harvest of shekels.

The alarm of fire at 9.30 last Sunday morning, was caused by a slight fire at the Old Upton factory now owned by J. B. Thomas, on Foster street. A general alarm was sounded, but it was extinguished with a few buckets of water.

Samuel Trask's new hardware store on Walnut street, is lathed and plastered and will shortly be opened for business. It will be finished in light wood and have other appointments to make it one of the best looking stores in town.

Reader, patronize those merchants that advertise in the PRESS. You are likely to get more for your money and less liable to get cheated. We would not advertise a firm knowing them to be a fraud, and we have confidence in all our advertisers.

Miss Mary Frothingham, sister of the wife of Deacon Jacob Perley, of Boston street, died quite suddenly of rheumatism round the heart last Thursday night. She was about 75 years of age, and was loved by those who enjoyed her acquaintance.

It is rather a singular circumstance that there should be a large number of licenses granted without a sign of objection from the abuttors on the licensed premises, and in many cases the said abuttors claim to be earnest temperance workers. Why should it be thus?

The Danvers Mirror says: A party of about twenty-five members of the Baptist Society called on Rev. Mr. Drury and wife the evening before their departure for the South, and with best wishes for their future welfare presented them with a purse of fifty dollars.

The advertisements are so frequently changed in the PRESS that they form no small portion of the weekly news.—Readers will miss many good things if they neglect looking over the advertising columns as carefully as they do those devoted to the other reading matter.

A sad case of blood poisoning occurred in this town last week. A man by the name of Michael Fahy, in the employ of Isaac Hardy, became poisoned while handling hides and gradually growing worse, a physician was called, but could do nothing for him. He died in great agony.

We hear it rumored that a large iron foundry is to be started in this town, before the coming fall. We hope it is true. We trust ample encouragement will be given by the town for this and other enterprises to locate here. While the leather interest is well represented there is ample room for others.

Arrangements are being perfected for a concert of war songs to take place under the auspices of Union Post 50, G. A. R., on or about the 6th of June.—Circulars of invitation are to be sent to prominent singers in town asking their co-operation. In fact, several have signified their willingness to take part.

A horse belong to Frank Marsh while crossing the Central street railroad crossing, got his shoe caught in the rail; in attempting to withdraw it, he was thrown on his side, and after considerable exertion on the part of the bystanders, he was put on his feet and went on his way without doing any damage.

A meeting of those interested in forming a subordinate court of the Massachusetts Catholic Order of Foresters was held at Hibernian hall, last Sunday. Thomas F. Lyons presided. Remarks were made by Mr. Hogan, of Boston, and Mr. Hanlon, of Salem. A permanent organization will be effected in two weeks.

The Temperance Committee appointed at the annual meeting of the South Church met Tuesday evening and organized by choice of Mr. Charles A. Haskell, President; Miss M. J. Floyd, Secretary; Mr. Henry H. Proctor, Treasurer. The first practical work they are to do is to give our citizens the privilege of listening to a lecture by Hon. Neal Dow, which will probably be on Sunday evening, May 27. Further notice will be given next week.

Two children, a son of Mr. Jas. E. Millea, and another named McCarthy, living on Foster street, were lost this forenoon, and after a deal of inquiring, the anxious parents found them on Central street.

Owners of residences are having again inflicted upon them the "photograph man," who comes along and says he has orders to take every house, and invites all the occupants to come out and have their pictures taken. In a few days another of the same species calls, and showing a proof, solicits an order. Give us a rest.

Chief of Police Peasley has gone to Newburyport to-day to appear before the Grand Jury in relation to two Peabody cases that will come before it, viz: The case of the party who stole the bonds, etc., from Mr. Needham of West Peabody, and the fellows who cut away and attempted to steal the lead pipe from the old Jacobs Factory.

A sad but disgusting sight was witnessed on Foster street early last Saturday evening. It was that of a drunken man leaning against the fence and holding by the hand a neatly dressed little girl not over three years of age, and as we passed by we heard the little child's entreaty, "I wants to go home, papa," while the brute of a parent was scarcely able to move.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Charles N. Symonds, executor of the will of the late Lavinia P. Osborn, of Peabody, has paid to the Treasurer of the Ladies' Benevolent Society the sums named in the following bequests: "For the purpose of carrying out the wish and design of my late husband, Amos Osborn, I give and bequeath to the Benevolent Society of Peabody the sum of two thousand dollars for the purpose of founding a permanent Home for Old Ladies in said Peabody, said sum to be kept safely invested until, with its accumulations and such additions as I trust others may be disposed to make for the same object, the fund shall be sufficient for said purpose, when said Home shall be established in such manner as shall seem wisest and best to the officers of said Society who shall determine in what manner and under what regulations said Home shall be carried on. I give and bequeath to said Benevolent Society the sum of fifty dollars to be expended at their discretion in the purchase of food and fuel for the poor of the town of Peabody."

Last Sunday, being Whitsunday, was appropriately observed at the Unitarian Church. In the afternoon a Sabbath School Concert was held in the church, which was attended by a large congregation. The church altar was handsomely decorated with flowers, and the usual exercises, consisting of singing by the school, recitations and readings by the scholars, were listened to. Baptism was administered to one child and several adult members of the Sabbath School. Remarks were made by Mr. Wells, Superintendent of the School, and by Rev. Mr. Hudson. During the exercises a duet by Misses Grace F. Dalton and Mary K. Felt was admirably rendered, Mrs. Culliton being the accompanist on the piano. In the evening, the pastor, Rev. Mr. Hudson, preached an able discourse appropriate to the day, on the "Holy Spirit," giving the origin of the name of Pentecost or Whitsunday, tracing the theological discussions which had been held throughout the past in reference to the "Holy Ghost," and finally gave the views of the Unitarian Church regarding the Holy Spirit.

The street railway company have raised the grade of their track at the Willows in several places, and lengthened the turnout and the hill so that the cars can be run on fifteen-minute time. The road will be opened on the 20th if the weather is favorable. The skating rink will be managed by H. E. Reed of Lowell, who made it such a success last year. The Pavilion will be managed by W. P. Davis of Gloucester, who is well known to the traveling public from his connection with hotels at Magnolia, Gloucester and Florida. The dining saloon will be on the lower floor, and other improvements will be made. The Atlantic House has been raised and a story added with piazzas and other improvements. Several new houses are being built and old ones improved.

Memorial day will be observed by a glass ball shoot by the South Peabody Club.

A large brush fire near Spring pond last Saturday afternoon, destroyed a lot of hay, which had been left near by.

About nine o'clock Monday evening the large morocco shop on Federal street, Beverly, occupied by Lynch & Welch was discovered to be on fire. The shop was nearly 100 feet long, four stories high and fully stocked. The loss will be about $30,000 on stock and machinery, which is covered by an insurance of $20,000. The building belongs to the Beverly Savings Bank, and was insured for $20,000. The Beverly pottery works of C. A. Lawrence, adjoining, were also destroyed with their contents, valued at $15,000. This property is insured for $8000. A house owned by H. T. Flint of Philadelphia, and occupied by Messrs. Kelsey and Cressey, was also destroyed. The house of E. Salarus on Dane street was damaged about $200, and the barn of John F. Burnham $50. The illumination was plainly visible in this town and was the subject of much speculation. Mr. Lawrence referred to above was formerly a resident of this town, and married a sister of Chief of police Peasley.

As some of our business men were returning from Boston yesterday afternoon, they noticed a man on the train in a semi-drunken condition, and he was accompanied by a small boy, whom he said he had stolen from his parents. So persistent was he in the story that when Peabody was reached Chief Peasley was notified and soon had the man under arrest. The man told several contradictory stories about the boy, and as both gave different names, there seemed grounds for detaining them.—It was afterwards learned from the boy that he lived in Lynn. Officer Peasley immediately started for that city and found his anxious parents, who came over and took him away. They told the officer that the man in whose company the boy was found was his godfather, and that he had called in the morning and asked permission to take him for a walk, since which time nothing had been heard from them until the officer arrived. The man was held for drunkenness.

There was a lady visiting in town last week, who was accompanied by her two children who were twins. There would be nothing singular about this, if it wasn't for the peculiarity of their birth. The mother said there was about a half hour's difference in their ages. One was born a little before twelve o'clock December 31, 1882, and the other first saw the light a little after twelve, January 1, 1883. Thus you see, although they were twins, their birthdays occur on different days, in different months and in different years. The mother much regrets she does not know which is the older.

Albert C. Perkins, Esq., well known in this town, having been principal of the Peabody High School for a short time, has been principal of Phillips Academy in Exeter, N. H., for eleven years. He has resigned this position to accept the Principalship of Adelphi College, Brooklyn. Phillips Academy observes its Centennial in June of this year, and during ninety-five years of its life it has had but three principals. This is a remarkable history.

At a meeting of the selectmen, Saturday, the following liquor licenses were granted—Thomas F. Brennan, John D. Lerwen, Patrick McClosky, John Canney, Ellen Roche, Timothy T. Riordon, Thomas F. Duffee, John C. McDonald, Mary Lawrence, William G. Dix, Elizabeth Shinnick, William Hayes, Daniel P. Grosvenor, Wm. T. Lee.

Is the time made by Morse Yellow Dock Nov. 3d, 1882, at Narragansett Park, being the fastest record ever made by any trotting horse in a public race. She is owned by the Morse Yellow Dock Syrup Co., of Providence, R. I., and is an advertising medium for their renowned Remedy for the cure of Kidney and Blood diseases and Dyspepsia. The owners of this young mare have refused a cash offer of Forty Thousand Dollars for her, and anticipate (with a little more age) showing, simply as an advertisement, the fastest trotter the world ever saw.

A PERFECT SWIVEL PLOW.

These few words will interest the farmers very much, as they have always looked with disgust upon the dead furrows left with the old landside plow, being unable to get a good Swivel Plow that would do good work and hold easily. The NEW NORTH AMERICAN SWIVEL PLOW will do it as it has won a record never before obtained by any other. It has been in use but a short time, this being its first season in Boston. C. H. Thompson & Co., 71 Clinton street, took the agency for New England and have sold up to the present time, about five hundred Plows and not one has been returned. Mr. Earl, of Worcester, has sold over one hundred and has had only one returned. These are facts worth knowing. Whitcomb & Carter, of Beverly, are the agents for this section, and their sales have surpassed their expectations. The manufacturers have sold every plow they have got or will have this season and are receiving orders daily which they cannot fill. These statements may look to some like blowing an advertising horn very loud, but such is not the case, as these are statements that come from honest, reliable men and they only ask of you as a further proof of these statements to take one of these plows on trial. We are informed that there are several in use in this section and if so, we hope they will come to the front and speak of their merits or demerits for the benefit of their neighbors.

OF ANOTHER AGE.

Gradually Supplanted by a Better Article Certain Old Things are Done Away.

In the general reception room of the Western Union Telegraph building on Broadway, New York, are exhibited the coarse, crude and clumsy instruments of the infancy of the telegraph. They are only relics now. More perfect machinery has superceded them.

Years ago what is now styled the old-fashioned porous plaster did some good service. There was then nothing better of the kind. Now all that is changed. Science and study have gone deeper into the secrets of medicine and produced BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER, which embodies all the excellencies thus far possible in an external remedy. The old plasters were slow—the Capcine is rapid; they were uncertain—the Capcine is sure. Cheaper articles bear similar names. Be careful, therefore, that some thrifty druggist does not deceive you. In the centre of the genuine is cut the word CAPCINE. Price 25 cents.

Seabury and Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Miscellaneous.

One of the peculiar institutions that is just now flourishing in New York, and finding an unusual demand in other of our large cities, is the employment of the private detective. It may have its legitimate uses, but the agency is now principally made use of by husbands to "shadow" their wives, and wives to "shadow" their husbands when out of each other's sight. This fact is either an index to an appalling amount of domestic infelicity, or betokens a sad degeneracy of social morals. Viewed in either light, it is not a pleasing state of affairs to contemplate. If marriage, as is too often the fact where wealth is involved, has been a case of barter and sale, it is not surprising that one of the parties has wearied of the bargain, and thus seeks an opportunity to throw off its galling yoke. On the other hand, if, by any means, distrust has been engendered where there should be mutual understanding and perfect confidence, happiness is made impossible, and it is not surprising that every supposed hidden fact should be sought for through this easily available means. Whether the possibility of this espionage shall lead such as might suppose themselves in danger of being subjected to it to upright living, may be a matter of grave doubt; but the unclosseting of many hideous family skeletons, now hidden from the eyes of the world, may be a revelation to many of the young and inexperienced, of the hollowness and vanity, the heartaches and sorrows of the fashionable world, and thus save them from making an empty mockery of life in the way that these have done. If so, this reprehensible custom will not have been in vain, though its present prevalence does not bode a cheerful outlook.—Lynn Union.

The law of 1881, for the preservation of lobsters, punishes the taking of them between the 20th of June and the 20th of September, by a fine of from ten to one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the House of Correction from one to three months; but if they are returned alive immediately to the waters from which they are taken, the capturer is not subject to the penalty. Any person buying, selling or having in his possession a lobster taken in this Commonwealth between the twentieth of June and the twentieth of September is liable to a fine of from ten to fifty dollars. An assault is cheaper than catching lobsters in the summer time, supposing both are prosecuted.

Probably no series of newspaper articles have been more extensively copied or more generally read than Peck's Bad Boy, which are so true to life that everybody recognizes in them the picture of his neighbor's boy. They have been collected and printed in a bound volume of 196 pages. Nobody can read this book without its at least provoking a smile and some of the sketches would make a ghost laugh. The Bad Boy is a thoroughly practical joker and yet it is doubtful if he is exaggerated in the descriptions of his mischievous pranks. If you want something readable get the book of your newsdealer. Belford, Clarke & Co., Chicago, publishers.

At a temperance meeting in Boston, recently, Lieutenant-Governor Ames presided. He was introduced as a representative of a prominent total abstinence family, and he said that 80 years ago, in drinking times, his grandfather made it a rule never to offer liquor to his guests. His father and uncle (Oakes Ames and Oliver Ames) were total abstainers. He, himself, had never touched liquor, knew nothing of the taste and had no temptation, no appetite for drink. He never offered any to his guests, and meant never to do so, and also meant that none of his children should learn to taste liquor.

The improvements on the passenger station of the Eastern railroad, Boston, are nearly completed, and the station is very materially altered for the better. The train house has been sheathed with wood, which takes away the unfinished appearance almost inseparable from bare walls, and all the walls and woodwork have been handsomely painted. The offices of the various officials have also been thoroughly repaired and rearranged, so that now they are as convenient as is possible with the limited room at command.

"Do you know the prisoner?" asked a Harlem judge of a witness; "Yes, sir, I do; I know him intimately; he and I were in a bank together at the same time." "Ah, when was that?" was the question of a shrewd lawyer, who was counsel for the prisoner. "Well, as near as I can remember, it was five years ago, and about 3 o'clock in the morning; none of the bank officers were present at the time." The witness was speedily excused.—Harlem Times.

It is worthy of note that out of 41,129,285 passengers during the past year by the eight railroads centering in Boston only eight persons were killed.

Book Notices.

We are in receipt of the current number of TRAVEL, a monthly magazine for the use of travelers, published at 162 Broadway, New York, by the American Exchange in Europe (Limited), of which Senator Joseph R. Hawley is President, and Henry F. Gillig General Manager. It is an elegant and most effective publication. The cover and the elaborate maps are the best work of the kind, and the text is of equal excellence. It contains all sorts of interesting and valuable notes for travelers; information about manners and customs, and a large number of skeleton routes in Great Britain, France, Germany, Switzerland, the Spanish and Italian Peninsulas, the Orient, and around the World. It is edited by C. A. Barattoni, the experienced traveler and manager.

FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE.—For delightful, edifying and instructive reading this magazine is not excelled by any of its contemporaries, and the June number, in these respects, we think, could scarcely be surpassed. The following admirable articles are profusely illustrated: "What is the Baptist Church?" by Rev. Dr. Chambliss, being a continuation of "Religious Denominations in the United States;" "Sacred Musicians of the Nineteenth Century," by Alfreton Hervey; "The American Pilgrim in Palestine," by E. De Leon, etc. There are articles by the editor, Dr. Talmage, on the late Alexander H. Stephens and Peter Cooper, and a sermon in the Home Pulpit, "The Cloudless Morning," and a most interesting miscellany. Price 25 cents, or $3 a year, postpaid. Address, Mrs Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

Thurlow Weed's Autobiography is announced for early publication, by subscription, by Houghton, Mifflin & Co., of Boston. This can hardly fail to be a work of permanent value and of engrossing interest. Mr. Weed, knew everybody worth knowing; he was a man of remarkable personal fascinations, even for those whom in politics he opposed most energetically; he was the trusted adviser of Presidents and Governors; and his career was peculiarly American. From the autobiographical papers which he published from time to time we infer that his "Autobiography" will be strikingly rich in anecdotes and reminiscences of the growth of the country and of its public men. It must be every way an attractive work, and one for which agents will find ready purchasers.

We have received the April number of Browne's Phonographic Monthly. It is fully equal to any of the previous numbers, and well sustains its reputation of being the largest and best phonographic magazine in the country. D. L. Scott Browne, Publisher, 23 Clinton Place, New York City.

Now is the time to treat Catarrh of long standing. Ely's Cream Balm reaches obstinate cases, where all other remedies fail. It is not a liquid or snuff and is easily applied. Price 50 cents.

ONLY TWO BOTTLES.—Messrs. Johnston, Holloway & Co., wholesale druggists, of Philadelphia, Pa., report that some time ago a gentleman handed them a dollar, with a request to send a good catarrh cure to two army officers in Arizona. Recently the same gentleman told them that both the officers and the wife of Gen. John C. Fremont, Gov. of Arizona, had been cured of catarrh by the two bottles of Ely's Cream Balm.

As many of our readers know, there is a man in this town who has lived here all his days and his father before him, whose name is Esrom Morse. But how many ever noticed that the name reads backwards the same as forward? Is there another town that has the same peculiarity?—Rockport Review.

FOR THE HAPPINESS OF HOME.

From a Clergyman's Home Comes a Message Containing the Wisdom of Experience.

Home is the centre of the social system. From it proceed the best and purest influences felt in the world and towards it gravitate the tenderest hopes of humanity. For it all good men labor while their working days last, and around it their last thoughts linger lovingly when those days are done.

Yet home does not usually approach in practice its own ideals. The mother is overtaxed with household duties and the rearing and training of her children, while the father fights the outside battle to win the wherewithal to meet expenses. Sooner or later care and toil leave their marks. It is true enough, as Kingsley sings in the "Three Fishers," that but too much working and weeping brush all the bloom from life's fruit.

"Men must work, and women must weep,"

Mental anxiety and lack of rest and pleasure induce physical diseases of many kinds; whence the need of a trustworthy tonic to give help and strength in times of need. Among the good women of the land who have found such a sure anchor is Mrs. A. C. George, wife of Rev. A. C. George, D. D., pastor of the Centenary M. E. Church, of Chicago, whose words we have her permission to quote:

"I use PARKER'S GINGER TONIC in my family, and can say that we are highly pleased with it as a tonic. From my experience of its value, I recommend it as a reliable family medicine."

Please note: first, PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not a mere essence of Ginger; second, it contains nothing to create an appetite for intoxicating drinks; third, it is a splendid health restorative for all who suffer from disordered Liver or Kidneys or any disease arising from indigestion and impure blood. Accept no substitute for it. Prices, 50c. and $1 per bottle. It is cheaper to buy the larger size. Hiscox & Co., New York.

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is
HEYLINGBERG'S
EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg, Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,
FRANK A. BRAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired.

Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

A YOUNG OLD LADY.

"Yes, Sir! I'm Younger than any of my Children now," said Mrs. Sarah M. Robinson, of 61 William St., New Haven, Conn.—We Read about this kind of Noble Ladies, but Seldom See them in Society.

"Yes, Sir; I'm younger than any of my children now. I keep up with the times, I read the papers, applaud the victories of old Yale, and don't grow old," were the words of Mrs. Robinson to your reporter when he called at her home. Mrs. Robinson is one of the earnest, go ahead sort of aged ladies, of whom you read, but whom you so rarely find in modern society. "I've had my share of trouble," she said, "for all my life I've been a sufferer from erysipelas. From this has resulted diseased stomach and inaction of the digestive organs. I've been troubled with dyspepsia, and have had such a weakness of the stomach it has seemed as if I needed something artificial and strengthening. I attribute this to erysipelas, which is constitutional with me. I've been under the physicians's care a great deal during my life, but I never received any permanent benefit I think until I began taking Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, which has proved a perfect restorative in my case. My health is better now than it has been for a long time. I consider Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY an excellent medicine. It is used extensively in this city. I keep it as a family medicine, and rely upon it for I know of the good results of using it."

Your reporter left Mrs. Robinson rejoicing in health and renewed youth, and bestowing merited praise on that which is the source of happiness to thousands, viz: Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Ask your druggist for it. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY has become a household word. Everybody, sooner or later, gets sick, and sickness is both wearisome and costly. FAVORITE REMEDY steps in at this point. It is not expensive and it is efficient. For all diseases of the Blood, Bilious Disorders, Kidney complaints, Constipation, and the aches and ills which make the domestic life of women a cross so hard to bear.

MONKEY INTELLIGENCE.

To-day he obtained possession of the hearth-brush, one of the kind which has the handle screwed into the brush. He soon found the way to unscrew the handle, and having done that he immediately began to try to find out the way to screw it in again. This he in time accomplished. At first he put the wrong end of the handle into the hole, but turned it round and round the right way for screwing. Finding it did not hold, he turned the other end of the handle, and carefully stuck it into the hole, and began again to turn it the right way. It was, of course, a very difficult feat for him to perform, for he required both his hands to hold the handle in the proper position and to turn it between his hands in order to screw it in, and the long bristles of the brush prevented it from remaining steady or with the right side up. He held the brush with his hind hand, but even so it was very difficult for him to get the first turn of the screw to fit into the thread; he worked at it, however, with the most unwearying perseverance until he got the first turn of the screw to catch, and he then quickly turned it round and round until it was screwed up to the end. The most remarkable thing was, that however often he was disappointed in the beginning, he never was induced to try turning the handle the wrong way; he always screwed it up from left to right. As soon as he had accomplished his wish he unscrewed it again, and then screwed it in again the second time rather more easily than the first, and so on many times. When he had become by practice tolerably perfect in screwing and unscrewing, he gave it up and took some other amusement. One remarkable thing is that he could take so much trouble in that which is no material benefit to him. The desire to accomplish a chosen task seems a sufficient inducement to lead him to take any amount of trouble. This seems a very human feeling, such as is not shown, I believe, in any other animal. It is not the desire of praise, as he never notices people looking on; it is simply the desire to achieve an object, and he never rests or allows his attention to be distracted until it is done.—Romanes.

NAPOLEON, A FATALIST.

The Chicago Eye contains the following Napoleon, with all his strength of character, was very superstitious; he believed in fate. One incident is recorded of his early life, that probably tended to strengthen these extraordinary views. He and two other young men came as conscripts from Corsica. On the way they were boasting of their future careers.

"I shall never be content until I am a colonel of the line," said one.

"Pardieu!" said the second, langhingly, "but my ambition is to be general of a division."

Then came Napoleon's turn.

"By my faith," said he, "I shall never be satisfied till I am first consul."

Then these three romantic youths made a compact that they would meet on a certain day, many years afterwards, at a celebrated hotel in Paris, if death spared them, and they were still in France. Probably all forgot the compact in the stirring scenes which ensued.

Years rolled on. Napoleon, as first consul, had to sit in judgment over a colonel who had struck a general in a tipsy quarrel. The hotel where the rendezvous was to be had been pulled down and was now part of the war-office. The three friends, however, did meet at the appointed spot under these strange circumstances, for in the general and the colonel he found his fellow-conscripts.

It is needless to say a reconciliation followed, and the strict rule of military discipline was for once ameliorated by this extraordinary man.

DIME NOVELS.

Pernicious stories of the "dime novel" class continue to do their mischievous work. The latest recorded victim was a New London boy, aged fourteen, who shot himself during a period of mental aberration caused by reading dime novels. Parents who hear of such cases and fear for their own boys usually wish that some one would kill the writers and publishers of the vile trash that most boys read when they can get it; but such wishes do not mend matters in the least, for there is no one to do the killing. The only antidote to the dime novel is good reading matter that is not prosy; there is plenty of it in market, and fathers who do not see that their boys are well furnished with it have only themselves to blame if the youngsters are compelled to find their own literature for want of a paternal supply.

EMPEROR WILLIAM AT HOME.

The Emperor William invariably wears his military uniform when at home. His study overlooks the Unter den Linden. While at his writing table he loosens the upper buttons of his double-breasted coat and throws back the lapels, but every day when the troops march past he hastily buttons his coat and stands in the window, in full view of the soldiers. A visitor, noting the trouble he took, asked him why he was so particular to button even the top button of his coat. "My soldiers," said the Emperor, "have never seen me with my coat unbuttoned, and I do not intend they ever shall; for, let me tell you, it is the one button left unbuttoned that is the ruin of an army."

The wife of a brand new member of Congress told her neighbors that the family would remove to Washington, but she was undecided as to how they would live in the capital; she favored taking one of the Potomac flats.

TESTIMONIALS

"I regard Mr. Eddy as one of the most capable and successful practitioners with whom I have had official intercourse.
CHARLES MASON Commis'r of Patents."

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office.
EDMUND BURKE,
Late Commissioner of Patents."

"Boston, October 19, 1870.
R. H. EDDY, Esq.—Dear Sir: You procured for me, in 1840, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, reissues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you.
Yours Truly, GEORGE DRAPER."

THE

PATENTED JULY 16, 1878.

With this device Windows are balanced without the use of weights and cords, and therefore no long boxes on each side of the sash are required. The adjustment to each window according to the weight of its sash and glass by tightening or loosening of its spring is very simple. It is always easy of access to take out for any desirable adjustment, and is applicable to

ANY KIND OF WINDOWS, WHETHER NEW OR OLD STYLE,

Assisting in the opening and holding them at any point to which the lower sash may be raised, or the upper lowered, for the purpose of ventilation and comfort. The general testimony of those whose houses have been supplied with these fixtures for three years is that they are a great convenience, and SATISFACTION IS WARRANTED.

HEAD OF CENTRAL.

A Letter from the Far West.

The typical Montanian is a sui generis. He is an adventurer. Any body can "go west" after the railroads have prepared the way. But the men and women who travelled many hundred miles beyond the railroad terminus by stage, or perhaps long in advance of the stage route, when the long journeys were made in prairie schooners drawn by patient oxen, and who endured the privations of frontier life as the advance guards of civilization—these were adventurers, and were of sterner stuff than ordinary tourists. Such were the original settlers of Montana fifteen, eighteen and twenty years ago.

Some of them were gold hunters, such as float on in advance of the railroads in all new countries, and who, when the railroads come up to them, will move on again. Already I hear many talking of going to Alaska, whose mineral properties are beginning to attract the attention of the mining world The earliest settlers in most of the larger places were miners, and gave the first impetus to many of the early Montana towns and often swelled the population to thousands in a few months' time. This element was usually rough; its rendezvous was the liquor saloon; its school, the place of profanity; and its church, the gambling hell. It often gave abundance of work for the vigilance committee in those days when there was no law and when a man sometimes came suddenly to the end of his rope without any disagreement of the jury. Such things as quashed, nolle prossed, and other legal terminology, indicative of the manner in which criminals often slip through the fingers of the law in these times, were not known in those days when the vigilantes rendered efficient service. This was the case twelve and fifteen years ago in Helena, and quite likely some of the same element will return, a few months from now, when the Northern Pacific railroad gets here. Railroads, I believe, always bring more or less of the sediment of humanity. The society of a western railroad town is always turbulent for a time on account of this element. But when the railroad moves on, much of this element goes with it to the next town; what remains gets killed off, falls to its level and gradually disappears from view, while the substantial element remains and develops the place. This has been the case with Helena since the place ceased to be a mining camp. Though numbering less population than formerly, it has steadily grown more and more substantial in its architecture, its business and its wealth, until it is now counted one of the wealthiest communities of its size in the whole country.

Many of the early settlers came from the Southern states in the early part of the war. Less than a dozen years ago it was estimated that one-half of the population of Helena was from Missouri. With the southern element more or less of the old party spirit very naturally remains. It slumbers beneath the surface of feeling, but sudden flashes sometimes reveal its existence.—There seems to be a tacit understanding that the war was ended nearly twenty years ago, and that it is wisdom to let it remain so. Some of the best families in my church and congregation are from the South. I preach to some who were officers in the Rebel army. Our only deacon, at present, was born and bred in Georgia. One of the noblest women I've met, and one of the most efficient workers in the church, was reared in Kentucky, and her husband, now one of the territorial officers, had a rope round his neck twice for his secession sentiments when a member of the Iowa Legislature during the war.—He is not a religious man and does not attend any place of worship—probably would attend with his wife if I were from the South. I am in hopes of getting him out yet. Have frequently been to dinner or tea at his house and have always been treated with genuine southern hospitality. Others came to the country actuated by a love of adventure. They hail from every state in the Union and every nation on earth. Hence the make-up of Montana society is thoroughly cosmopolitan. At the table where I daily sit there are nine boarders: one each from Pennsylvania, New Hampshire, Wisconsin, Kansas, Virginia, Ohio, Germany, and two from Massachusetts, representing Boston and Peabody. Their employments and calling are equally diversified. One is a dealer in stoves and hardware; one, a government surveyor; one, a lawyer; one, a railroad office clerk; one, a U. S. Army clerk; one, a printer and one a clergyman. This is a type of the city, and largely of the whole territory. The variety of callings and characters constantly met with in this country is an interesting study.

In a recent stage coach journey, among the nine inside passengers, there was a murderer on his way to prison; a constable; a commercial traveller; a revenue officer; a government surveyor; an United States soldier, en route for Washington, to testify in the star route trial; a cow boy and a clergyman.

The intellectual character of Montanians is of a higher average, from the make-up of the population, than is common in the Eastern States. This, I think, may be more largely true of all the West than is ordinarily supposed.—I was surprised, when visiting the schools of Cheyenne, Wyoming territory, under the escort of Prof. Sparks, formerly of Manchester, N. H., to find them as thoroughly equipped in buildings, apparatus, and all the educational paraphernalia, as schools in the East, and doing as good work—fitting boys for Harvard College, if necessary. I find the same true in Helena, except that the schools have out-grown their buildings, and the regular course of study does not embrace all the languages requisite for admission to Eastern colleges. But the aim is to do equally as thorough work. I witnessed a recent school exhibition where the rendering of the parts—considering the extreme youth of many of the pupils participating — excelled anything of the kind I had ever seen. And the little girls were so elaborately dressed that it seemed to me almost a case for "The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children." The little things were worthy of pity as well as praise.

It is my impression that there are more college graduates in Helena than in ordinary places of double its size.—One is liable to see in a Sabbath congregation, here, more educated and professional men than would be seen in ordinary congregations many times its size. It it not uncommon for college graduates and rich men's sons to be found in Montana broadcloth—canvas suits lined with blanket stuff and trimmed with leather—doing duty as a cowboy or sheep herder on some of these western ranches. I have found such men in mining shafts 500 feet beneath the surface of the earth, drawn thither by the love of adventure and the large wages paid.

This intelligence, coupled with the infidel sentiments and German rationalism, prevailing in the far west, makes "old-timers" here rather chary of missionary preachers sent out to do them good. According to the last U. S. Census Report the illiteracy of Montana was 4.8-10 per cent., which was ninth in rank of intelligence in the list of states and territories, Iowa standing at the head, having but 2.4-10 per cent. illiteracy, and New Mexico at the foot, having 60.2-10 per cent. By the last Annual Report of Territorial Superintendent of Schools there are 155 school districts and 189 schools in Montana.—There are 191 teachers employed, at an average monthly compensation, for male teachers. of $75.74; female teachers, $64.20. The number of persons between the ages of 4 and 21 years is 10,483, of which number 6,054 are enrolled in the public schools of the territory, which is 58 per cent. of the school census. The average monthly cost of tuition for each pupil enrolled is $2.45, and the school tax 3 and 7-10 mills.

There is a bill now before the Territorial Legislature on compulsory education. It will be needed, as the numerous railroads now opening up the territory will soon increase its foreign population and its illiteracy. Several collegiate schools and universities are soon to be incorporated, and suitable buildings will doubtless be erected during the next two or three years.

L. L. WOOD.

Fraternity Lodge will celebrate the anniversary of the Order, on Wednesday, May 23, and will give a grand reception to Howard Lodge of Charlestown, and Fountain Lodge of Topsfield. Members will meet at the Lodge Room at 7.30 P. M. The programme includes a concert by the band assisted by talented vocalists, in Mechanic Hall: a banquet by Harvey Blunt, of Boston, and an entertainment in Kinsman Hall, which will be decorated for the occasion. There will be fireworks. Over four hundred are expected to sit down to supper. Subscribers may purchase concert tickets for their families and friends. It will be the grandest celebration of the Order ever held in Salem.

Dramatic and Musical.

The great success of the Union Sq. Theatre Co., "A Parisian Romance," is to be produced this week at the Park Theatre in Boston. The cast includes Miss Georgie Cayvan, and will be equal to any of its representations at the home theatre. Next week the "Banker's Daughter" will be produced. The annual visits of this company to the Park Theatre are invariably greeted with enthusiasm, and this engagement is no exception to the rule.

"Heart and Hand," the reigning musical novelty, is to remain the attraction on the boards of the Boston Theatre during the present week only; and the production merits, in all respects, the generous patronage of the public. The performance of "Heart and Hand" has steadily improved since the opening night; and there is no lack of appreciation on the part of the audiences. Performances will be given every evening, as well as on Saturday afternoon, at the usual hours.

Joseph Murphy, in "Kerry Gow," at Mechanic Hall, Salem, last Thursday evening, was greeted with a full house, and it is probable that with this entertainment the season in Salem will close The business has been very successful during the season, as a whole, and the class of entertainments fully equal to any thing presented. Some fault is found with the stage setting at Mechanic Hall; the same scenes being used at nearly every show that is brought out. It certainly is monotonous—and in many plays where the scenery is indispensable to a proper performance it is no wonder that loud complaints are heard.

Arrangements have been made with Supt. Foster of the Lynn horse railroad to convey Post 50 to Cedar Grove Cemetery, Memorial Day. There will be extra cars run, to accommodate the public.

Poet's Corner.

Old Friends.

The old, old friends:
Some changed, some buried, some gone out of sight;
Some enemies, and, in this world's fierce fight,
No time to make amends.

The old, old friends—
Where are they? Three are lying in one grave;
And one from the far-off world on the daily wave
No loving message sends.

The old, dear friends!
One passes daily, and one wears a mask;
Another, long-estranged, cares not to ask
Where causeless anger ends.

The dear old friends!
So many and so fond in days of youth!
Alas! That Faith can be divorced from Truth
When love in severance ends.

The old, old friends!
They hover round me still in evening shades;
Surely they will come again when sunlight fades
And life on God depends.

"What is if?" or, "The Secret Out."

"What is it" turns the wheels of trade,
When merchandise's correctly made,
Gives keenness to the razor blade?
Leather.

"What is it" beautifies the foot—
Of understanding the very root—
Takes "odds of trade and gives it boot?'
Leather.

"What is it" makes tramps toe the mark
When caught in barns just after dark,
And causes a profane remark?
Leather.

"What is it" makes a dandy vain—
Sometimes it gives him grievous pain—
Yet proof against the snow and rain?
Leather.

"What is it" straps the little kid
When he behind the house is hid,
For doing what he was forbid?
Leather.

"What is it" saddles every horse
With stitches in the side, of course,
And makes him better—never worse?
Leather.

"What is it," if we had it not,
Would touch us on a tender spot,
And bare our feet to stones so hot?
Leather.

"What is it" makes the world "move on"
(The human world—the streets upon),
Without which the world would be forlorn?
Leather.

WM. H. NEVIL.

At the Box Office.

We stood within the corridor;
I had just stepped inside the rail
To get my tickets, when I saw
The state of matters and turned pale—
I had put on new clothes throughout
Upon this jaunt with her to come;
I'd brought this heavenly creature out,
Leaving my pocketbook at home.

I stood there, vexed and mortified;
'Twas cruel as it was absurd;
Then did a little gloved hand glide
Straight into mine, without a word,
Leaving a dainty portmonnaie
Of gold and pearl most quaintly made,
From which, scarce knowing what to say,
I for the evening tickets paid.

When I sat down along with her—
"Now, don't look so annoyed," said she;
"Of course, mis akes sometimes occur,
And people lose their property."
Confused I answered, "I agree,
But must feel vexed about it though;
What's yours does not belong to me"—
Said she, "Why shouldn't it be so?"

She spoke unthinkingly, then blushed.
"Oh, do you mean it?" straight I cried,
My wild delight she would have hushed;
A feeble "No" in vain she tried;
But I'd not hear it; so at last—
"Yes—just to keep you still," said she.
"There, there, don't hold my hand so fast—
The usher will be sure to see."

A Wild Ride.

We had been living in Ireland for about two years, and every day I regretted the time more and more when my husband had decided to leave England and come over to manage his property, which was situated in one of the most lawless and disaffected countries.

Fenianism was rife, and heartily I wished we were away and over the water again, at least until these troubled days had given place to better and more peaceful times, and now that the long, dark winter afternoons and evenings had set in again, I used to sit and watch anxiously for my husband's return; when Lionel would come in looking uneasy and moody, and keep his revolver always loaded, though he never told me that he suspected danger, and made light of it for my sake.

Oh! it was a wretched, miserable time, and I can never forget it. I remember so well how the crash came at last, and how the volcano burst forth that had been smouldering so long. We were sitting at breakfast one morning when the letters were brought in, and after handing them the bearer stood fidgetly about. Lionel looked up.

"That will do, Delaney, and tell John to bring the dog-cart around in half an hour."

"Lionel, I don't like that man," I said, after he had left the room. "I am sure he is a spy. I wish you would get rid of him."

"Oh, the fellow is right enough It is his brother, you know, that I am going over to court about to-day."

"What is it?" I exclaimed, as Lionel got up suddenly, looked vexed and annoyed, and threw a letter into the fire. "Lionel, is it another of those dreadful letters?"

"Yes, warning me against giving evidence against Delaney to-day. What is the country coming to? But there; I ought not to have told you—it will frighten you into fits."

"Lionel, you must not go to-day—indeed, indeed, you must stay at home; they may mean what they say. Oh, promise me you won't go."

"Nonsense—absurdity; Winifred, don't be so foolish. Why, dear, these are all empty threats. But once show the white feather and they will be ten times worse. You foolish little wife," he added tenderly, "and so you worry and fret yourself when I'm away, expecting me home on a shutter, I suppose. Well, don't sit up for me to-night, for after the trial is over I am going to dine at Col. Arbuthnot's and won't be home till late. Now I must be off."

A few loving words, and then I stood watching him drive down the avenue, turning now and then to wave a farewell. I was only half satisfied, and was wishing he had not gone. After lunch I went out to take some wine to the lodgekeeper's child, who was quite ill. It was late when I started, and the sun was setting behind the mountain, shedding a flood of crimson light over the golden glories of the fading day. I stayed there until quite dark, when I started for home.

Suddenly hearing footsteps, I paused; nearer and nearer they came, and then through the darkness I could see two men approaching, talking in low earnest tones. Sick with terror I drew back behind a large tree, for one of the men was Delaney. At first they spoke in low, earnest tones, but by degrees their voices were raised, and at last Delaney, raising his hand, exclaimed with a vehemence that made me shudder,—

"I tell you, if it's done at all, it must be done to night. What's the use in talking, man? It's acts, not words, we want. He passes the cross-road to-night, coming home from the colonel's a mile beyond, by the common and chalk-pit. It's a lonely spot—there's our place. Be there when the moon is up, and mind, no mistake this time."

He laughed, actually laughed, as he planned and plotted the deliberate and cruel murder of my husband, who had been a kind and good master to him. At last they parted, Delaney hurrying back in the direction of the house, with a last injunction to his accomplice not to fail, and after waiting a long time, to make sure that he was gone, I went slowly home and reached my room unobserved.

There I matured and laid my plans deliberately and carefully, for it was life if I succeeded, and oh! far worse than death if I failed. So I dressed as usual, and, though every scrap of color had left my face, and I knew I could not subdue all expression of the horror that I felt, I preserved an outward calmness, and went on down to the dining room, as though the man standing beside my chair had not, only two short hours before, planned to take my husband's life.

How I got through I know not, but the meal was over at last. Still I could do nothing until Delaney left the house and started on his deadly errand. My plan was this:

When he had gone I intended to go down to the stables, get the horse and ride to Col. Arbuthnot's trying to reach it before Lionel had started on his way home.

It was a daring step, but the only chance; lonely and isolated, we were miles from any town, and no help was possible. I should have to ride hard, and, to avoid being discovered and stopped, I must make a long round, which would take me many miles out of my way. At last the time to act had come. Delaney must have started long ere this, and the servants would be at supper. The clock was striking nine as I left the room. Going up stairs quickly, I put on my habit and stepped out.

It was a clear, bright night, with the moon rising over the dark tree-tops, and shining coldly on the glossy evergreens, casting ghostly, weird shadows across the path. I reached the yard and saw, to my alarm, a light in the harness room. Without taking time to hesitate or think, I advanced softly and peeping in saw, to my great relief, that it was only the stable boy engaged in rubbing up the harness, Opening the door, I stood before the astonished lad, who gazed with wide open eyes as though I had been an apparition.

"Christie," I said, "saddle Rifleman as quickly as possible. I want him."

"Sure, ma'am, you're not going out to-night?"

"Yes, I am. Quick—do as I tell you."

Burning with impatience, I watched him getting out Rifleman, and then, as I was about to mount, catching sight of the wonder and surprise on Christie's face, an idea struck me, and sending him back in the stable on some pretext, I locked the door and took the key. No one knew where I was; it would be a long time before he could make himself heard no matter how loudly he called, for the yard was a long way from the house. In another minute I was on Rifleman and cantering swiftly down the avenue and out on the open road.

"Rifllman," I said, stroking his glossy neck, "it rests with you to save your master. You must do your best for the time is short."

Away we went, keeping well in the shadow of the trees which skirted the road; the soft grass muffled the sound of the horse's hoofs, and faster, yet faster, I urged Rifleman to his topmost speed, for what if I were already too late? The moon was nearly high in the heavens, and I knew the hour was rapidly approaching. It was a ride for life, and on we rode with fearful rapidity.

What if Lionel were on his way already? Oh, for the strength to keep up a little longer! The entrance gates to Col. Arbuthnot's stood wide open, and with hope in my heart, I galloped up to the house. The door was opened by the colonel himself, who hurried out in great alarm.

"My husband—is he here?" I gasped.

"No; he has just left—not more than ten minutes ago, I think; but what has happened?"

"Too late! too late!" I cried. "They have killed him! Oh, Lionel, Lionel!"

They tried to stop me, but I broke away; there might be time yet, if I rode hard and fast. My horse might die in the attempt—what mattered it? It was life or death now; and away again, thundering down the avenue I went, heedless of cries and entreaties to come back.

Stopping one moment to listen, I heard far ahead the rumbling sound of wheels; it seemed to endow me with new life and strength to keep up, to struggle a little longer; but poor Rifleman was almost done for. He still labored on, answering whip and rein to the last.

Gathering up all my energies for a last effort, I urged Rifleman once more to a gallop, and, sweeping around a corner saw, with a wild gleam of joy and hope, my husband's dog-cart slowly ascending a long, steep hill, right in front, the foot of which on the other side was the spot where the murderers were in waiting. Every yard of ground was of value now.

I tried to call out, but only a feeble cry escaped my lips; and still running with a kind of strength and determination born of despair, I pushed on, till suddenly all grew dim and indistinct. I was conscious only of a great and terrible darkness raising and hiding my husband from my sight; struggling on blindly with outstretched hands I staggered a few steps, and then with a last wild wail of "Lionel—Lionel" fell senseless upon the earth—my last desire being to save him. Was it all in vain?

* * * * * * * * * * * *

When I opened my eyes again, I found myself in a cottage, in the bright glare of a fire, with a crowd of eager and frightened sympathizers around, and Lionel bending, white and anxious, over me. It was enough to know that he was safe—to cling tightly to him and feel his strong, protecting arms around me—and weak, tired and exhausted I fainted again.

It had been a very narrow escape after all. Lionel had just reached the top of the hill when he heard my cry, and driving hastily back, had found me, to his great astonishment, lying insensible, and Rifleman standing beside me. Presently, Col. Arbuthnot, who had followed in hot haste, had come up, and they had carried me into the cottage, wondering greatly what it meant. And I told my story.

Had I been a minute later, in all probability I should never have heard his voice again.

Delaney waited in vain that night, and whether he guessed or suspected that his plot had been discovered was not known, for ere morning had dawned he fled and succeeded in making his escape from the country. Lionel and Col. Arbuthnot did all they could to have him brought to justice, but in vain—he was never heard of since.

We left Ireland before Christmas, for I could not bear to stay there after all I had gone through, and I never wish to see it again. As for Rifleman, I will never part with him; the good horse that carried me so well that memorable night shall have a happy home and end his days in peace; but for him I would not have won that terrible race.

THE JOURNALIST.

Nothing is truer than the following from Chamber's Journal: "There is no profession in which a man stands more supremely on his merits than in that of journalism. In many others promotion is more a question of influence, of good fortune, or of time than of actual working capacity. In journalism, influence goes for little or nothing, unless there be on the part of the aspirants real efficiency to perform the work that has to be done. There never was a greater competition in the press than there is at the present day, and that competition is more likely to become keener than to diminish. It is becoming more and more a question of the survival of the fitest, and special eminence is ever more difficult to attain. The incompetent and inexperienced, therefore, must inevitably go to the wall."

In the newspaper business, distinction is won not by favor but by hard work and a natural adaptation. In any life which is strictly professional, a man may be advanced through favoritism, and by consulting associates be able to hold his position, but in journalism no consultation will aid him. It is the experience yesterday that helps him to day. If he be employed in the news department, he must know that department, he must know which article to condense and which to extend. Some subjects which a "raw" though well educated man would dilate upon can be disposed of in ten lines, while an occurrence which the student would regard as trivial, a kind of five line occasion, would demand two columns of spread. Every experienced newspaper man knows that there are some subjects of which you cannot say too little, while there are others of which too much cannot be said.

Several attempts have been made to make the newspaper business professional. Colleges have added journalistic courses to their intellectual programmes, but in every instance failure has resulted. It astonished the presidents of the colleges that the professors of Greek literature could not successfully instruct the young man how to write up an account of "how Mr. Gitson knocked the spots out of Captain Slug."—Arkansaw Traveler.

The trustees of the public library of the town of Woburn are agitating the question of opening their reading room and art gallery on the Sabbath, and it is understood that they are favorable to such a change.

Poker Playing.

TRAGIC ENDING OF A MISSISSIPPI RIVER GAME.

"But by all odds the most interesting game I ever saw was played on the Belle Lamar, in '57," says a correspondent to the Chicago Herald. "There were circumstances connected with it which made it an all-absorbing event to the few people who understood what it really meant. The players were two only. They are both dead, and probably all their descendants have followed them to the grave, so I may mention their names and tell you about the train of events which led to that game and its attendant tragedy. In 1856 there lived in a small town in Kentucky, a beautiful girl named Alice Crayton. She had a number of suitors, but of all of them two only seemed to meet with passing favor in her eyes. One was a rich young planter named Horace Ellison, and the other a young lawyer, recently from the North, named Converse. Ellison had the advantage of his rival in looks and accomplishments. He had travelled extensively, was well read, polished, and bore the reputation of being a dare-devil in affairs of gallantry, and was said to be not over upright and honorable in his affairs with women. He was the sort of a man to attract most girls. But Miss Crayton preferred Converse, a plain young fellow, and finally married him. Ellison, after swearing to be revenged, went to New Orleans to live. Two years after their marriage Converse, returning home on the Belle Lamar, after a business trip North, discovered his old rival, Ellison, among the passengers. All feelings of resentment had died out of his heart and he greeted Ellison heartily, the latter returning his handshake with well simulated warmth. For a day the two men chatted together agreeably, to all appearances good friends. The next evening Ellison proposed a little draw to while away the monotony of the voyage. Converse readily assented and they started the game in a large state-room. Four or five others were present but they didn't join it. At first the ante was trifling. As Converse steadily lost he insisted on raising it with each deal and began drinking, a rare thing for him to do. His ill-fortune continued, and after a seance of two hours he began to borrow money from his friends in the room, having lost all of his own to Ellison. The latter was cool and firm as a rock. He seldom spoke, and then in cutting accents, which added to the fast-growing enmity his opponent felt toward him.

"Perhaps if Mr. Converse would finger his glass less and his cards more, his game would be more interesting and less easy to beat," Ellison remarked.

"Mr. Converse can take care of himself under all circumstances," Converse retorted.

"Yes, he demonstrated his facility for looking after his own interests, two years ago, when he won a great stake, but not by fair play."

I saw Converse's face flush. He understood the allusion to the old rivalry between him and Ellison, and its covert insinuation. He started as though to say something but stopped. The game went on, and soon after Converse had lost every penny, and his watch and diamond pin.

Ellison laughed sneeringly. "Mr. Converse should apply his methods in love-making to card-playing," he said.

"What do you mean, sir?"

"What you please. Shall we continue the game?"

Converse was white with fury. The gambling spirit, mingled with hate and rage, was on him. As if in answer to his unspoken thoughts, Ellison said in his cold exasperating tones. "You lack a stake. I will hazard all my winnings against the night-key of your house. We will play three hands in five for it."

This monstrous proposition struck us all dumb. Converse bounded from his chair and gasped. He was speechless. In fact the emotions of this great experience had deprived him of the power of words. Ellison alone was unmoved. He sat quietly tossing the pile of gold before him with his white fingers.

"Do you consent?" he asked.

The loss Converse had sustained he could not replace. Ruin was before him. On the other hand the privilege he was invited to hazard meant, if he lost it, a dishonor worse than death. What thoughts passed through that man's mind in a few seconds will never be known. He grasped the back of his chair, stared wildly around and hoarsely muttered "yes."

You may imagine how breathlessly we bent over the players now. They shuffled the cards in silence. Ellison won the first two deals. The next, Converse won. The fourth time, amid a silence in the room deep as the tomb, Ellison dealt and gave Converse two queens, a jack and two nine-spots. The latter drew one card and announced himself ready. Ellison glanced quickly at him and laid down four aces. I always thought he had stocked his hand.

"You have won the key," said Converse. He drew it off the ring, and then, quick as lightning, crowded it into the barrel of his revelver. "Take it," and pulled the trigger. Then he turned the weapon upon himself, and fell dead on the corpse of his antagonist, whose brains bespattered the cards which had destroyed their fortunes and honor and lives.

The New York Morning Journal publishes the marvelous cure of Mrs. S. G. Kellogg, who lay for weeks in a paralyzed condition, without the use of her limbs. Seven physicians were called in and discharged, every known remedy was tried without relief, until St. Jacobs Oil was applied, which completely cured her. The St. Louis Post Dispatch publishes the wonderful cure of Mrs. Phœbe Rice, sister of the Hon. Clay Sexton, Chief of the St. Louis Fire Department, a sufferer for long years with acute rheumatism. The muscles of her hands and limbs were so contracted, she could not comb her hair, and had to use crutches. Physicians gave her only temporary relief, but the effect of the first application of the great pain-cure, St. Jacobs Oil, was instantaneous. The continued use of it, gave her free use of her limbs, and restored her to perfect health, cured.

Col. Henry Lee, who was one of Gov. Andrew's staff officers, has just got home from a journey and says in regard to Gov. Butler's claim to being the adviser of Gov. Andrew in regard to the early overcoats for Massachusetts troops: "I beg to state that Gov. Butler's advice upon this matter was neither asked nor received by Gov. Andrew, and his first and last word was a request that a mill in which he was director might manufacture the cloth for the overcoats."

Gov. Butler suffered more impertinence last week. On his way home from Providence the railroad conductor insisted on seeing his pass. In something of a huff the General looked through all the gubernatorial pockets and paid his fare, receiving a check good for 10 cents at Boston.

The Pullman Car Company are constructing two parlor cars, specially for the New York & New England railroad, and will cost $25,000 each. They will be placed on the new trains that are to be arranged about June 1st, leaving Boston daily for Chicago at 2 o'clock, or possibly 3 o'clock.

The officers of the Eastern railroad have ordered that circulars, hand bills, etc., shall not be placed in or upon their depots. We notice that the walls of the stations have been cleared of these encumbrances, and now look bare and disfigured with blotches of paste used in putting up various hand bills.

O neighbors, neighbors, rouse you! Quick!
My heart is empty and forlorn,
My heart is empty, faint and sick,
For John came dragging home at noon
Two frozen limbs, and oh! and oh!
My boy left buried in the snow!

Nay, blame not John; The day was wild
With driving snow that drowned his face.
The hidden sleigh now holds my child,
The horse stands frozen in his place,
Come, neighbors, quick! Be not so slow!
My boy lies frozen in the snow.

The snow is frozen; follow me!
Like ice this gleaming sea of snow!
And far across the frozen sea
The mound where he is lying low.
Oh, like to gold his hair; his eyes
Were bits of yonder bluest skies.

I clad my boy in the best I had.
The sleigh sped ringing toward the mill;
My boy! My poor lost farmer lad!
Oh, that I had you with me still!
Why, I would give these snowy lands
To knit two mittens for his hands!

But, neighbors, neighbors, here! Behold
This mound of snow, this broken place!
A sweet face in a sheen of gold!
Two blue eyes laughing in my face!
My boy, my boy, safe, sound and well!
Breaks like some chicken from his shell!

Joaquin Miller.

Afterward.

He was dead, they told me, and I did not believe it—my noble, handsome husband! It could not be true, and I laughed in the face of the physician when he repeated the assertion.

Not twelve hours before I had kissed Harold good by, and watched him ride away over the prairie. It was a lovely day, but to an experienced eye, the clear-cut white clouds, showing so vividly against the dark blue of the sky, were the banners of the vanguard of a storm.

But no one could have foretold that a terrible cyclone, two hours later, would burst upon us, leaving ruin and death behind it.

Yet so it was. Two hours after my husband had said "Good-by Madge; don't sit up for me; I may be late," and passed from my sight, a black, funnel-shaped cloud appeared in the southwest, and half an hour later it broke over the little village of Pearl.

Strangely enough it swept only the western edge of the place, levelling the few houses in its track, passing on to the town of Albion, where the destruction was fearful.

But Harold, my husband, was caught on the plain right in the path of the cyclone—no shelter on either side which he could reach in time. A party of home-coming hunters found him a few hours after the storm had passed, lying face downward on the prairie, where the cyclone had dropped him after carrying him no one knows how far. The horse he rode was found dead a mile further back.

I had been glad that he was away from home, out of reach of the storm, never dreaming that he was right in its way on the prairie; and so when they brought him in, white and still, I would allow myself to think of nothing only that he had fainted. When the doctor and others came to me, saying, "Try and bear it, Mrs. Howard; your husband has been dead hours," I said, "It is not so!" And then I grew angry that they should tell me so dreadful a thing, and breaking away from them I threw myself down beside him, calling him all the old loving names, pressing passionate kisses on his face.

But he was silent and cold—so cold that the chill from his lips struck to my heart. I could not see. I thought I was dying too, and was glad.

But I lived. If grief killed women, few of us would be living.

The gray clouds of November hung over the earth when I was strong enough to face life again. The necessity of earning a living was brought sharply to my remembrance when I found myself nearly penniless.

My girlhood's home had been in Albany. I had married Harold against my proud old father's express commands. I loved him, therefore it mattered little to me that he was poor.

But father was exceedingly angry that his only daughter should throw herself away on a penniless fortune-hunter, as he chose to call my husband. I knew that Harold was not a fortune-hunter, so I married him, and we came to Kansas and settled in the little town of Pearl. One short year of married life had known no cloud. Now all was changed. I was a widow at twenty, the daughter of a rich man, therefore unused to methods of earning my own living. I could not appeal to my father. He had disowned me, and I had inherited something of his own indomitable will.

What should I do? I could not sew. There was music-teaching, that infallible resort of broken down gentlewomen, but that I could not do; I was out of practice and I hated teaching.

An idea came to me like an inspiration. I had a natural genius for cooking. After my marriage I did all my own work, and my husband had often said that, being the daughter of a wealthy man, it was marvellous that I could cook like a Frenchwoman. I formed my plans at once. What cared I for social position—I, whose life was darkened forever?

I sold all the furniture, all the jewelry I possessed except my wedding ring, secured testimonials as to character from leading citizens in Pearl, and telling no one where I was going, went to San Francisco. When I arrived I had one trunk containing my clothes, and money enough to board me cheaply for a month.

The next day after my arrival I looked over the "Wants" in a daily paper. One struck my fancy, in particular, and I determined to answer it:—

"Wanted immediately, a first class cook—good wages and pleasant home to competent person."

I put on a plain gray dress—I did not wear mourning; Harold would not have wished it—and called at the address given. There was an appalling array of women in the vestibule of the large house which I entered. The servant seemed puzzled, when she answered my ring, as to what I was until I said,—

"I came to answer the advertisement."

She understood, and seated me beside a fat Irishwoman, who looked upon my diminutive figure with unmistakable scorn.

One by one they went upstairs, and one by one they came down again. Judging by their faces, the interviews were not satisfactory. Feeling my courage taking flight, at length I ascended the stairway and was ushered into the presence of the lady of the house. She was a handsome woman of forty, with a look of weariness and vexation on her face. Near the window, in an easy-chair, sat a man of perhaps thirty, whose face indicated that he was recovering from a severe illness.

An expression of surprise crossed Mrs. Davidson's face as she asked,—

"Did you answer my advertisement for a first-class cook?"

"Yes, ma'am," I replied. "I think I could please you."

"But—I beg your pardon—you do not look like a cook."

I felt my face flush as I answered,—

"One need not be less of a lady because one is a cook."

"No," doubtfully. "Have you ever been in service?"

"No, madam," I answered; "but I can give you testimonials as to character, and I should be glad to prove to you that I can cook. Please do not think," I added eagerly, interpreting the perplexed look on her face, "that because I was not born in that station of life that I shall expect to be treated differently from any other servant. Being compelled to earn my living, I have chosen this in preference to any other method. Will you look at my letters?" offering two or three.

She took them, and crossing the room gave one or two of them to the gentleman by the window, who had not seemingly been listening to the conversation. Evidently the letters were satisfactory, for after a few low-toned remarks Mrs. Davidson returned to me, saying,—

"I will try you. My nephew is just recovering from a fever, and I shall want you to exert your utmost skill in his behalf."

Ringing the bell, she ordered the servant who answered to take me to the kitchen, adding,—

"You may tell whoever calls hereafter that I have engaged a cook."

I followed the girl to the kitchen, and shortly after Mrs. Davidson appeared and gave orders for dinner, informing me that I should have to assist in waiting upon the table when there was company, that my wages would be twelve dollars a month, and that she would send the coachman to my boarding-house that night for my trunk.

Then began a strange life for me, yet I was not unhappy. I mourned my husband, I grieved over my alienation from my father. But I gave satisfaction to my employer, because I could cook to perfection.

Of course I had no friends. The other servants looked upon me as a rara avis, but I managed to secure their good will. By feeding my employers well I gained their esteem also, and after having been there six months Mrs. Davidson one day told me that she had never known what it was to live till I came to her. I did not presume upon my education, or the fact that I was a lady; so if Mrs. Davidson had felt doubtful, as I know she did, regarding the expediency of employing "lady help," she had found her doubts groundless. I attended strictly to my work.

So the time passed until I had been cook a year. I had been required perhaps a dozen times to serve the dinner I had cooked, and those were the only times I had seen the gray eyes of Mr. Temple—Mrs. Davidson's nephew—who had entirely recovered on the regime of good food I had prepared for him.

One day Mrs Davidson came down stairs and said,—

"Mrs. Howard, I am going to give a dinner next Wednesday, and you must do your best, for I expect a valued friend from the East whom I especially wish to honor."

I did my best, and the dinner served at eight o'clock would have tempted a king.

When it was time I went in with the cream, but I nearly dropped the tray I carried, for at the right of the hostess sat my father, Judge Dellaire!

Strong man that he was, he grew white to the lips as he sprang to his feet, crying:

"Madge, Madge! My daughter!"

Chauncey Temple, grasping the situation more readily than the others, took the tray from my hands, thereby saving some lovely Dresden china from destruction, and, a moment later I was crying in my father's arms.

Mrs. Davidson behaved with the utmost presence of mind. Turning to the astonished guests, she said: "You will excuse us for a few minutes," and leading the way to the library and left me alone with my father, saying as she kissed me, "I am rejoiced."

Dear old father! He was delighted to get his little girl back. Shortly after Harold's death he had concluded that he wanted his daughter bad enough to put up with her husband. Receiving no answer to the letters addressed to the place where he had last heard of us, he began a vigorous search. He traced us to Pearl, and there learned of my husband's death, losing of course further clew, because I had told no one where I was going. Mr. and Mrs. Davidson were friends of his younger days, of whom I had never heard him speak. Being in San Francisco on business, he naturally stopped at their house.

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and other Persons liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Peabody.

The Assessors of the Town of Peabody hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that their office will be open on and after the first day of May until and including the first day of June, and all persons liable to be taxed in said town are hereby required to bring in at the said office true and perfect lists of all the polls (males twenty years old, and upward), and schedules and estimates of the personal estates for which they are liable to pay taxes.

Copartnerships

having a place of business in Peabody, and also in some other city or town within the Commonwealth, are especially notified to bring in a statement in accordance with the 24th section of the 11th chapter of the Public Statutes. Shipping and business income are not taxable to a firm, but each resident partner must include these items in his individual return.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

"Any mortgagor or mortgagee of real estate may bring in to the assessors of the town or city where such real estate lies," within the time specified in this notice, "a statement, under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagee or mortgagor. When such property is situated in two or more places, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement." [Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882]. When a statement in conformity with the law above quoted is brought in, the real estate therein returned will be assessed under sections 14, 15 and 16, of chapter 11 of the Public Statutes. But in cases where the mortgagor of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, NO STATEMENT OR RETURN IS REQUIRED from either mortgagee or mortgagor, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Estates in Trust.

Persons holding estates in trust, whether for minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of persons deceased, have been divided during the past year or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator, or other person interested, is required and warned to give notice of such change; and in default of such notice, will be held to pay the tax assessed, although such estate has been wholly distributed and paid over.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation therein, and any one neglecting to furnish the assessors with such list within the time above specified will be deemed at a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors, agreeably to the law of the Commonwealth. All persons will take notice that statements of personal property must be in writing, and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board, NOTWITHSTANDING A VERBAL STATEMENT OR INFORMAL WRITTEN COMMUNICATION TO ANY ONE OR MORE OF THE ASSESSORS. [Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 29 and 41.] When a person has failed to bring in a list or schedule of all his taxable property, in conformity to this notice, no abatement of a tax so assessed upon such person for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on personal estate, if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent. [Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 73.]

Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office.

Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.

The attention of the Officers of all Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 247 of the Acts of 1882, as the property of said corporations, both personal and real, will be subject to taxation unless the law is complied with. Blank forms for the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors.

TOWN OF PEABODY.

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.

THE Board of Health appointed by the Town hereby make and publish, as required by law,* the following "Regulations for the Public Health and Safety:"—

REGULATION 1ST. It being the duty of the Board of Health, of the Town of Peabody, to make such examination of the premises of persons residing in said town as they shall deem necessary for the public welfare, the Board hereby give notice and require that all premises within said limits shall be ready for inspection by the Board on and after June 1st, 1883.

REGULATION 2D. No house offal, filthly water, dead animals or refuse of any kind, shall be thrown upon the streets by any resident; and no butcher, fishmonger, or vender of merchandise, shall leave any refuse upon the streets of this town.

REGULATION 3D. If, upon inspection, any rubbish, offal, decaying animal or vegetable matter, or filth of any kind be found in, under or about any building, within any yard or enclosure, upon any premises, or in the ponds or water courses of said Town of Peabody, or if any privy or drain be found so discharging as to prove a nuisance, and offensive or deleterious to the public health, the owner or occupant of such property or premises shall be notified by the Board to remove or abate such nuisance within 24 hours after said notice has been served.

REGULATION 4TH. If any owner or occupant of property as aforesaid, after having been duly notified, shall neglect to comply with the requirements of the above section, the Board of Health shall cause any and all nuisances to be removed or abated at the expense of the owner or occupants.

REGULATION 5TH. No hogs or goats shall be kept within the limits of this town, except in pastures, or in enclosures kept free from standing water, and regularly and freely disinfected.

REGULATION 6TH. It shall be the duty of occupants of dwellings in which any person or persons may be sick with small pox, and Physicians attending such cases of small pox, forthwith to notify the Board of Health of the fact.

REGULATION 7TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where small pox exists, or has existed, shall prohibit and prevent the removal of clothes, bedding and upholstering, or other articles from the infected buildings or dwellings, except the removal is made by permission, or under direction of the Board of Health.

REGULATION 8TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Scarlet Fever and Diphtheria exist shall withdraw all children attending school from the same; and the teachers of said schools shall not allow children thus withdrawn to re-enter the school until they shall present a certificate from the attending Physician vouching for the safety thereof.

REGULATION 9TH. Night soil carts shall not be allowed to pass through the streets in the thickly settled portions of the town between sunrise and sunset, from May 1st to Nov. 1st, without a special permit from the Board of Health.

These Regulations will be Strictly Enforced.

The Peabody Press.

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

NO ONE who has noticed the patronage which the new line of horse railroad to Lynn has received, can doubt for a moment the advantage of the connection of the two places. The travel of last Sabbath exceeded even the most sanguine expectations. At eleven o'clock the road commenced to run an extra, and on that and succeeding trips both cars were full, until at two o'clock from Lynn another car was added, and thereafter three cars each way, were barely able to accommodate the people who wished to ride. As the three cars, one after another, passed the different points, all heavily freighted, many were the exclamations of surprise, The conductors and drivers were in the best of humor, and equally with the passengers appreciated the situation, and used every effort to accommodate and please the patrons of the road.

It is a significant fact that the travel from Lynn to this town was in excess of the patronage the other way, showing that our neighbors are as unacquainted with the attractions and pleasant surroundings of our own town as our citizens are with those of Lynn. And during the summer travel we think it will be demonstrated that the travel on this line will induce a change of scene. While our own people, who have made the Willows a place of resort, will go to the Nahant beach, where new scenery will meet the eye, the people of Lynn, to whom this beach is so familiar, will seek a change. And they will travel this way and thence by the Naumkeag R. R. to the Willows. So while this resort will lose the patronage, to some extent, from our people, they will gain another and a new one. On the whole we think both places of resort will continue in popularity, and gain rather than lose by the introduction of the road.

The open cars are more and more becoming a means of travel for those who cannot afford the luxury of a carriage. It is the poor man's coach in every sense of the word. And what pleasanter ride on a Sabbath afternoon, or any other afternoon, for those who seek pleasure in this method, can be imagined than a trip to Lynn, through the constantly growing suburbs of this town and Lynn—with the cool and refreshing breezes of the trip, in an open horse car. The road is in excellent condition—less tiresome by far than in a carriage, and it can be made full as rapidly, and what is better, at much less expense. It is not to be wondered at that our citizens and those all along the route are enthusiastic over the completion of the road. Its value as a business agent is also great, and we think this will soon be appreciably felt, both in our own town and Lynn.

WE CAN SEE nothing in the speech of Gen. Cogswell in reference to the veto investigation, which should lead our democratic friends to open their arms to receive him into their fold. Because he differed from the views of the many in reference to its conduct, is not an evidence of his lack of republicanism, or that he is a Butler man. We regret that all republicans do not see as Gen. Cogswell did in this matter. It is not for that party to oppose the acts or wishes of the Governor of the State, on partisan grounds. He is the Governor, not of the democratic or republican party, but of the state of Massachusetts. Let his actions be judged by their fruits—if wise commended. But let us not oppose everything that comes from his hands. We feel that the people of the State can be relied upon to vindicate her name in the next campaign. It is not agitation, but reform in its true sense, that the people want. Convinced of their error in the selection of the present Chief Magistrate of the State, they can be trusted to reverse their action the coming fall. It will rest entirely with the Republican party whether this result will be accomplished or not. If they rise above the party spirit which has animated the opposing party since the accession of Gov. Butler, they will succeed. We believe they will do it, and that those who voted for our present governor "just to see what he would do" will be abundantly satisfied before the close of the present year.

THE GENERAL orders from the Department Commander of the Grand Army calls the attention of Comrades, and through them, of the public generally, to the change in the name of "Decoration" to "Memorial" day.—The decoration of the graves of the soldier dead is only one of the many associations of the day, and Memorial Day means the sacred and reverential revival of the memories which cluster around the occasion which the Grand Army commemorates. It is a day of memories—to live over the scenes in which those who have passed on also bore a part. In this spirit it is urged that the comrades discountenance the prevailing tendency towards making the day a holiday in a general manner, by introducing other festivities than those of a memorial nature and tending to divert attention from the central thought of the day. Such precaution is wisdom. Our holidays are becoming more and more occasions of sport and rejoicing. Memorial day is not in this sense a holiday. With saddened hearts should love's tribute to the departed heroes be paid. It will be done cheerfully—as a sacred duty imposed upon the surviving comrades. By mutual consent those of us who are not members of this Army are permitted to share by our sympathy in the observances of the day. It is well, also, that we join in making it as far as possible a day of rest from labor. But let the associations of the day be kept ever in view, making it "Memorial Day" in its truest sense.

THE BOSTON Traveller has been interviewing prominent Republicans of the State in regard to the prospects of the election in Massachusetts the coming fall. All agree upon one point—that if a strong man is put in nomination by the Republicans Gen. Butler can be defeated. It is too early to enter upon the discussions of the qualifications of this or that candidate. The principal point to be gained is the awakening of the party to the fact that whoever can be heartily supported with the old-time enthusiasm should receive the nomination. Personal preferences must be laid aside. And it can be safely left to the judgment of the Convention. We think the leaders of the party, in the main, see this,—and will be ready to unite together and work harmoniously for victory. Massachusetts is a Republican State still, and with the right man in nomination, will be seen to be so, by a large majority.

OUR suggestions in last week's PRESS in reference to a Law and Order League have met with much approval from our citizens. Especially is this the case viewed in the light of the large Sunday travel to this town from Lynn. The Sunday law in reference to the sale of intoxicants in that city is sharply enforced. It is no secret that it is not so enforced here. Last Sunday there was more drunkenness seen on our streets than for a long time, and it is safe to say that the visitors from our neighboring city were given abundant opportunity to slake their thirst. Here is an opportunity for a Law and Order League to do some work, and aid very materially in the enforcement of this particular law. We have no doubt that the Selectmen would be encouraged to take active measures in this direction, if they could feel that they had the support of such an organization. Without it we see no hope for an improvement in this direction.

While the matter of recesses in our schools is receiving some attention from the teachers, the following from the Teachers' Institute is of interest as giving in a concise form the argument in favor of a change:

"The custom of having a recess in which the pupils go out of the building, get tired, soil their clothes, fall into disputes and contentions, and lose their interest in their studies—is but a custom. No small number of teachers have no such recess, considering it a damage to the school. The plan is to have—say six recitations in the forenoon, and a rest at the end of each. During this rest the windows are opened for fresh air; the pupils ask questions of the teacher; whisper to their neighbors (if they wish); move about the room if any need to; or go out, as they do so putting their names on a book. If there is too much noise a pencil-tap is heard from the teacher's desk; two taps bring all to their seats and business is resumed. As the chief difficulty arises from the going out of pupils, the teacher inspects the "going-out-book" and when he finds one pupil does too much of this, freedom to go out to that pupil is taken away. After a time the pupils learn to use and not abuse their freedom. There are many advantages about the no-recess plan. In the cities many private schools have no recess and no intermission. The hours are from 9 to 1 with several rests. A good deal of injury comes from recesses; the school is broken into four parts; a bad pupil can do much injury; many vexations occur. A pupil needs to study his lesson, but recess comes and he is obliged to go out, and his mind is diverted, and he returns with his head full of what he was told at recess, or of some game to be finished. Many a teacher has thus learned to dread the recess. But some will fear the pupil's health will suffer from this long confinement. This is not a necessary conclusion. How is it with children in workshops? They work from 7 to 12, from 1 to 6, in them. If a pupil changes his seat, has fresh air, and a varied occupation, his health will not suffer.

The popular and enterprising Old Colony Railroad has made a general reduction of fares, both on single and package tickets, all along its line.

BOSTON'S TWO FAIRS. — The arrangements for the Foreign Exhibition go on apace. Reports are coming in from all the commissioners and agents, and also many applications for space directly from foreign manufacturers and others who purpose exhibiting.—The building of the Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic Association passes into the hands of the Foreign Exhibition Association June 1, and the work of preparing it for the exhibition will begin at once.

While the managers of the Foreign Exhibition are so industriously engaged, the officers of the New England Institute are making much progress with their exposition. Taking the two exhibitions together, Boston will have this fall a world's fair; and these expositions, one showing the arts and industries of foreign lands, and the other the vast resources of America, will attract to Boston many thousands of visitors.

The managers of the New England Institute are hard at work, and their successful exhibition of last year is likely to be eclipsed by that to be held this fall. The exhibit of the Southern States is to be very complete and interesting, and a new feature, the Women's Department, will attract much attention. The manufacturers of New England are showing great interest in the fair, and promise to make the exhibition a representative one of New England's many industries. When the magnificent building of the Institute was erected, it was feared by some that it was too remote from the business centre of the city, but the wise foresight of the founders is now seen, for so rapidly are buildings going up on the Back Bay, and so easy is the communication by horse cars, that what then seemed far out of the way now seems near by, because of its accessibility.

The Point of Pines is being put in order for the approaching summer travel, under the management of C. H. Thayer. The music will be by Arbuckle's New York Band, and it is needless to say that it will be unusually fine. The Eastern and Revere Beach Railroads will run trains as usual, and it is said that the Lynn & Boston horse railroad proposes extending their line of track to the grounds. The preliminary season will commence June 17 and the regular season about the first of July. An immense crowd of spectators will witness the great Hanlon-Kennedy boat race, May 30, on which occasion it will cost $1 to enter the grounds of the Point of Pines. The Narrow Gauge will have their entire line doubled tracked and in running order in time for this race. Hanlon, who is now training at Lowell, will leave that city for the Point of Pines, May 27. Undoubtedly this will prove one of the most memorable races that ever took place in this country, the starting point of which will be directly in front of the bathing houses.

James J. Henshion of No. 1 High St., Salem, held the lucky ticket (No. 647), which drew the order for the life size India Ink Portrait, offered as a prize at the Orphan's fair, by W. H. Crowley. Mr. Henshion is to have a picture made of his brother Patrick, who died a short time ago. Mr. Crowley says he will see that it is done in first class style, and it will be placed on exhibition on Essex St., very soon.

Palmer & Bradley of Salem, boot and shoe dealers, just this side of the horse car station in Salem, have a nicely assorted stock of goods which they are prepared to sell at the lowest living prices. Look in at their store when next in Salem, and see their styles, which include all the latest novelties for ladies', Misses' and children's, as well as for gents' wear.

Ira P. Nador, well known in Peabody, makes the very best of ice cream, and can be found at No. 45 Market street, Lynn. The horse cars pass directly by the door, and it is a fine chance to stop over one car and get an ice cream. Also if our readers want it for family use, leave your orders with George Stevens, and have it delivered at your house, free of charge.

The popularity of the Pearl shirt, which is to be found at the store of William R. Weeks, No. 185 Essex street, Salem, is rapidly increasing. If our gentlemen readers wish a well made unlaundered shirt, call at Weeks' store and look over his assortment.

A visit to Salem is not complete without a visit to the carpet rooms of Morrill & Bowen, just above the horse car office. This firm is now showing lines of goods in all grades of carpets which cannot fail to please.

Read the prices announced by the Naumkeag Clothing Co., in their new advertisement, this week. Over $20,000 worth of goods to be sold at wholesale prices. The goods are fabulously cheap.

Manager Eugene Tompkins, who sailed on Thursday for Liverpool, will bring back, no doubt, a series of grand theatrical novelties for the Boston's stage.

PEABODY.

Flags on Memorial day should be at half mast.

Mr. Lyman Osborne and family have returned from their Southern trip.

A bark car was pushed across the Central street side-walk this morning by the shifter.

The old shifter, No. 49, recently in the shop for repairs, is again on duty on the Eastern Railroad.

We hope for the speedy recovery of Mrs. D. S. Littlefield, who is suffering from a severe attack of pneumonia.

Don't forget the auction sale next Tuesday, of the tannery on the corner of Oak and Winter streets. Chas. Odell is the auctioneer.

Yesterday afternoon as Dr. Pike was entering his carriage, the horse who is a little nervous turned in such a way as to break one of the shafts.

Mr. P. L. Winchester has hired the old O'Shea tannery on Grove street, and is having it repaired previous to engaging in the tanning business.

Mr. J. W. Vaughn has orders for some ten or twelve of his new machines, which will be manufactured as soon as the stock company is organized.

Israel Giles, a veteran teamster, for many years employed by Lyman Holman, the building mover, died quite suddenly at his boarding house in Salem, this morning.

An exhibition of wrestling was given yesterday by the champion wrestlers of the Eastern Railroad, Benj. Pedrick and Walter Hayward, in the freight yard near the depot.

As the freight train from Salem for Lowell passed through here this afternoon, the engine broke down, causing the train to be backed to Salem for another engine, in order to proceed to Lowell.

As a small boy named Smith was passing across the Square this afternoon, he was suddenly kicked by a horse attached to a stone drag, that was passing at the time. Fortunately he was not much injured.

Mr. B. J. Keith of Lynn was in town last Thursday, looking over the field, with the intention of putting on the road a couple of one horse herdics. They will hold four persons and he proposes to charge fifteen cents a person to any part of the town proper.

Ladies' handkerchiefs now come with broad borders of brilliant colors. These handsome adjuncts to a lady's costume are not to be ignobly concealed in the pocket, but are worn conspicuously tucked into the belt or corsage, in a manner to display the border in full.

Mr. Thomas Green showed us the other day a lot of potato parings that had been removed from a dirtheap, that had a top on them at least two inches high. They were transplanted and we anticipate a good crop of potatoes from those parings will be the result.

Our friend Teague is on hand to-day with an announcement in reference to Boots and Shoes. Our readers need not be told that everything purchased at this store can be relied upon. His bargain counter is a great success, as many of our readers have found to their profit.

The second corps of Cadets has voted to parade on Monday, June 11. A visit will be made to the Willows, and a dinner discussed at that resort. Subsequently it is proposed to take up the line of march for the common, where an inspection, though not an orderly one, will take place.

Mr. Kimball of Middleton left his horse and buggy standing on Foster street, last Saturday, and entered a saloon. Upon his return he found it taken by a drunken fellow, who refused to get out, but after a deal of coaxing consented, but he was so intoxicated he had to be assisted.

The Eastern railroad advertises that the "ice is out of the lakes" at the Rangeleys and that therefore the spring fishing has commenced. The Eastern road, with its Maine Central connection, is one of the most direct ways of reaching the lakes, or, in fact, any of the hunting or fishing grounds in Maine.

There was a sign displayed in a store window announcing that three 10-cent pieces would be given inside for twenty cents. This is one of the latest and shrewdest schemes yet. The "three ten-cent pieces" is the name of a brand of tobacco, and people who confidently bring in their twenty cents, with the intention of making a dime, get left.

As Wambold's circus was coming from Danvers to Peabody last Thursday morning, one of the pair of horses attached to the baggage wagon, became unmanageable. He reared and plunged and finally threw himself down; after a hard struggle he was raised on his feet, put upon the wagon again, and proceeded on his way without any further trouble.

Last Monday as a driver of Hoyt's beer team was coming up Main street, he lost from his pocket a letter containing a check for eight dollars, and continued on his way unconscious of his loss. A brown spaniel dog that follows the team, picked up the letter and when his master stopped on Lowell street, the intelligent animal presented him with the lost check.

Next week's issue of the PRESS will contain our usual full account of the services of Memorial Day in this town, and will include the address of Rev. V. M. Simons, which we are permitted, by the courtesy of that gentleman, to publish in full. Our readers and all friends of the Grand Army will wish to read this address, which will be unusually eloquent and instructive.

Chas. Odell of Salem, has sold a house lot on Tremont street, containing about 5000 square feet, to Dennis Donovan for $250; and two similar lots on Winthrop street to Michael Collins, for $110 each. The lot with cellar, at the corner of Tremont and Winthrop streets was purchased by James Brennan, of Salem, for $305. The land was the property of James E. Millea.

There will be a rally of the Tanners and Curriers' Union of this town, Friday evening at the Town Hall. Mr. F. K. Foster, of the Union, Mr. Chas. J. Chase, of the Currier's Union of Somerville, James Tyrone, of the Central Trade, and Daniel J. Brown of Salem, are expected to address the meeting. All tanners and curriers, and the public generally are cordially invited.

What funny things they have over to Lynn. The new horse railroad brought over last Sunday a couple of curiosities, apparently about eighteen years of age. They wore white tall hats, light overcoats, skin tight pants, white vests, carried slender silver headed walking sticks and wore eye glasses, and crooked their elbows. They attracted considerable attention and were called "dudes."

About forty friends of Mr. Geo. W. Pickering, of the firm of Wm. Pickering Jr. & Co., coal dealers, called on Tuesday evening at his new home, 149 Lafayette St., on a "house warming" expedition, which was admirably planned and successfully carried out, and after an evening spent in enjoyment, of which singing was an important factor, the party separated at a late hour.

Wambold's Circus gave two exhibitions, afternoon and evening, at Highland Park on Wednesday, to fair-sized audiences. The ring exhibitions of trained horses and dogs and elephant, the contortions of Master Wilson, the ground and lofty tumbling of the Loftus brothers, and the trapeze performance, are rarely excelled by any company. With practice this will make a good show for small towns.

To-morrow evening a concert will be given in the vestry of the new church in South Peabody for the benefit of the building fund of that church, by the Winuchus Quartette, of Lynn. Those of our readers who desire to aid this church will find convenient transportation by the new railroad, and we trust a large attendance will be the result.—Half the proceeds is to go to the fund. A very attractive programme has been arranged.

We learn that Mr. J. B. Thomas, with commendable enterprise, will erect a neat building next to the present store of Geo. Stevens, to be used as a station for the Lynn & Boston Horse R. R Co. Mr. Stevens has already hired the new building, which is to be fitted up with a new glass front, and connected with his present store. It will give George better accommodations, besides being a convenience to the patrons of the new line.

Last Sabbath, at the Congregational Church, the quartette choir gave place to the chorus choir, which has been rehearsing for some weeks, and which is under the charge, as we have previously mentioned, of Prof. Bill, of Salem. The change is quite material, and is in accordance with the plan of the Committee, and the recognized wish of that church. We are informed that the singing of the new choir gave great satisfaction.

Attention is directed to the sale of an important and valuable water privilege connected with the sale of the Winona Mills property, which is advertised in our columns. At some future day, if water should be desired from Humphrey's Pond, the privilege would be worth more than it is probable the entire property will sell for. And this privilege is owned by the proprietors of this property. It will be a good investment for some one.

The status of the bicycle and the rights of its rider are coming to be interesting matters of discussion, as the use of the silent steed increases. Bicyclists generally claim that the bicycle is a vehicle and that it has precisely the same rights on the street as any other vehicle. This opinion has been contested in some places, where it is sought to regulate the use of bicycles by ordinance, and the controversy promises to hasten some legal decision.

Have you seen the French flowers, which Frank Cousins is selling at his Bee-Hive, at 25 cents and upwards? All the goods in the Millinery department of this store are worthy of an early inspection by our readers.

WHO WILL FIX THIS?—A lady in St. Louis, who recently lost a child, and who vainly pleaded with the authorities of the church near her residence not to ring the bell on a Sunday morning when her little darling was so sick, wants to know if we don't think people would go to church on time, just as well, if no bells were rung. Well, yes, we believe they would, if they wanted to. When the same people go to a theatre, no bell is rung, and they get there before the curtain rises with remarkable regularity. No bell is rung to call these church members to business, and yet they appear regularly at the appointed time. No bell is rung to tell them that dinner is to be served, and yet they all start in time to be there before it gets cold. If a sociable is to take place, and it is known that the lunch will be served at eight o'clock, they all get there before the first plate of oyster soup, or the first dish of ice cream, is served, and the church bell does not ring for a sociable. When the doors of a circus are advertised to be open at two o'clock, we have noticed that no church member comes straggling in after the clown has sung his song, and yet the bells do not ring for a circus. We cannot account for the necessity of ringing a church bell that often frightens sick persons into convulsions. But there are so many things in the world that nobody can account for. Who can account for the fact that a dizzy actress can get a thousand dollars a week for repeating lines that another person has written, when the scholarly, eloquent divine, whose life has been passed in study, cannot draw a house big enough to pay him a frugal living. Who can account for the fact that a girl who can kick high is able to draw $500 a week, while the good woman who goes about as a missionary, reforming the vicious, is thrown a quarter to get rid of her, often by the same men who pay a $1 toward the salary of the high kicker. It is hard to account for the fact that a horse race will clear $1000 in one day, while a church fair, which should be patronized by thousands, figures up about enough, after a week's hard work, to pay for a dressing gown for the minister. There is something terribly wrong about this world, but we can't untangle it. If we had our way the prize fighters should play to houses smaller than the prayer meetings, and the ministers should preach to full houses at a dollar a head, tickets sold at the box office, and it would be necessary to hang out a sign, "standing room only," and no bell should ring to call the audience, and to kill sick babies in an adjoining block. We would have ministers travel in private cars, and nigger shows travel in ordinary passenger coaches. We would have the horse race just pay expenses, and the church sociable make a barrel of money. But some of the rest of you have got to fix this thing, and average it up. We have tried it and failed.—Peck's Sun.

The School Committee have accepted the offer of Prof. Bill to teach music in the schools of the Center, Bowditch and Wallis districts for the remainder of the present term. The engagement is temporary and is an experiment. If successful it is probable that some such arrangement will be continued. It is muched liked by the teachers, and is a part of school education which has received much attention in the schools of our neighboring towns and cities.

The letter of Rev. Mr. Wood this week on the religious status of Montana, will be read with interest. This is the second of a series of letters from the pen of this gentleman, which we shall publish from time to time. The next one will contain some account of the politics and society of the place.—Those who look upon Montana as made up of wild, uneducated people, with no advantages of civilization, will be undeceived by the reading of these letters.

The New York & New England will, on Sunday, May 20, make several important changes in its time-table.—While the local trains will be more or less affected thereby, the principal changes will be on the through trains. It is the intention to quicken the running time of several of these, and also to furnish better train accommodations to the stations along the line in Connecticut.

It is not generally known that Manager J. M. Hill, who has successfully brought out Denman Thompson, and later Margaret Mather, is one of the largest clothing dealers of Chicago, and his theatrical ventures, although prodigious in profits, have been carried on secondarily to his business.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The programme of exercises for Memorial Day which occurs on Wednesday next, has been arranged by Post 50. The Comrades will assemble in full G. A. R. uniform at eight o'clock A. M. and the line will be formed at 8.30. The Post will be accompanied by the Salem Brass Band of twenty-five pieces under the leadership of Ralph L. Reinewald, who will appear for the first time in their new uniform, which is buff and scarlet, trimmed with gold lace. They will march to the Square and decorate the Soldiers and Sailors' Monument, then down Main street to the old Monument and after decorating this, will take the cars of the Lynn and Boston Horse Railroad for Cedar Grove Cemetery. Prayer will be offered at the soldiers' lot by Rev. J. W. Colwell, of So. Peabody, and after decorating the graves of the comrades here and at Emerson Cemetery, they will return to the Square when a collation will be served at Upton's Hall. The Post will then be dismissed, to assemble again at Headquarters at 1.30 P. M., to attend the public services at the Peabody Institute at 2.30, where an address will be delivered by Rev. Mr. Simons, formerly pastor of the Methodist church of this town. The services at the Institute are free to the public, and they are cordially invited to be present and participate in the observance of the day. The following is the programme of exercises here:—

1. Selection, Salem Brass Band.
2. Reading of Orders, by Post Adjutant.
3. Quartette, "Comrades We Come Once More" —C. A. White Misses Grace Dalton, Minnie Felt, Messrs. Frank W. Stanley, Frank W. Taggard.
4. Scripture Reading, Rev. J. W. Hudson.
5. Invocation, Rev. W. F. Sprague.
6. Quartette, "O'er every sleeping heroes' head" —C. E. Prior.
7. Address, Rev. V. M. Simons, of Springfield, late Chap. 5 Reg. Vt. Vol.
8. Selection, Salem Brass Band.
9. Prayer, Rev. C. N. Smith.
10. Reading, National Hymn, America, Rev. W. G. Sperry.
11. Benediction, Rev. Geo. Walker.

At the close of these exercises the Post will form and march down Main street to the Old and Friends' Cemetery, thence through Main, Central and Elm to Monumental Cemetery, to Headquarters. In the morning the graves at Needham and Bryant Cemeteries in So. Peabody and in West Peabody will be decorated by a detachment from the Post. The number of graves to be decorated are 43 at the Monumental Cemetery, 24 at Cedar Grove, 3 at the Old Cemetery, 1 at the Friends', 12 at Emerson Cemetery, 1 at Bryant Cemetery, 7 at West Peabody, 1 at Needham Cemetery.

Shortly before two o'clock last Monday morning, fire was discovered in the carpenter shop of Mr. Mayhew S. Clark on Wallis street. The fire department were quickly on the spot and soon had the fire under control and saved the adjoining buildings, which are owned and occupied by Mr. Clark. In the building were eight or ten thousand feet of manufactured lumber, besides other lumber that was stored there. His loss will probably reach $600 or $700, which is partly covered by insurance in the Home Co. placed through Mackintire's agency. The following employes had their tool chests containing their tools in the building, and their chests were badly burned but the tools were only injured by water. Their loss will vary from ten to thirty dollars. John Saunders, Geo. Durkee, David Holland, Daniel Holland, S. C. Getchell, Joseph Walton, John O. Hawes, Samuel Goldthwait, Patrick Ellis, Edwin Drown. The men had no insurance. The building was formerly the property of the late Gen. Sutton, but is now the property of the heirs of the late James O. Safford. At one time it was used as a bark and hide mill, and it was here that Justin Jones, a brother of Mr. A. W. Jones, lost his life by being caught in a belt. It was very old. There was no insurance on the building. The origin of the fire is not known.

We regret to be called upon to record the decease of Charles H. Dodge, which occurred last Wednesday evening. Mr. Dodge had been suffering from a throat difficulty for some time; but he was able to be about, and had been seen on our streets but a few days prior to his death, which was sudden, though not entirely unexpected; at the last. He called at our office a few weeks since, in reference to some business, and was in the best of spirits, although able to speak with great difficulty. Mr. Dodge succeeded his father, the late William Dodge, in the blacksmith business, in the old shop on Central Street, where he did a large business until his retirement about a year ago. He was a man of kindly feelings toward all—manifested in many acts of benevolence and charity. He leaves one daughter and two sons, one of whom is the Sub-master of the Salem High School—the other succeeds his father in the blacksmith business. His funeral was attended last Sabbath from his late residence on Park Street. His age was 52 years 3 mos.

Last Saturday evening about half past eleven, there was a small riot in the boarding house next to the depot. A boarder, who had filled up with that which "cheers but some time intoxicates," came home and refused to pay his board, and was ejected from the house, and the door locked against him. This was more than his generous nature had been accustomed to, and he immediately proceeded to batter down the door, but that amusement was quickly interrupted by the arrival of the police, and in a short time their words and presence induced the man to retire very quietly to his humble cot. As a persuader the policeman is a success.

The concert of war songs to be given in the Peabody Institute, Wednesday evening, June 6th, is already assured of success. It will be given under the auspices of Post 50, G. A. R., and the programme, with slight variations, will be like the concert given in Boston. A drum corps will assist, together with the G. A. R. quartette of Salem. The chorus will consist of the best male singers of our town, who have entered into this concert with hearty enthusiasm. The solos will be given by well-known female vocalists, whose names will be announced in our next issue. We anticipate a crowded house on this occasion.

Rev. Mr. Spaulding of West Peabody paid a visit to the Alms House last Wednesday, and accepted an invitation to dine with the inmates. The bill of fare consisted of fresh fish, potatoes, and bread and butter. After the Reverend gentleman had disposed of a goodly amount of the fish and potatoes and about three slices of nice home-made bread, he arose from the table with the remark that he had enjoyed his dinner and that it was good enough for anyone. Should he visit the institution often, it is feared the West Peabody Farmers' Club would have to find new subjects to discuss, rather than our Poor Department.

The A. H. B. Association have elected the following officers: President, Timothy Desmond; Vice President, Michael Cunningham; Secretary, James Buckley; Collector, J. H. Thomas; Treasurer, Thomas F. Hutchinson; Auditor, James J. McCann; Directors, Richard Cummane, Dennis F. Sweeney, John Pease, Timothy O'Mahoney, John Holleran; Visiting Committee, Philip Hyde, Dennis Sweeney, William Marrs, William Holleran, John Dorgan; Librarian, James O'Connor; Assistant Librarian, Thomas Collins, 2d.

As the shifting cars were coming across the Central street crossing last Monday morning, the flagman, Chas. Benjamin, was in the Eastern Railroad station. He was told by parties standing there that the train was coming, but instead of going to the crossing, he made a violent attack on one of them with the flag, striking a horse standing there in the affray, starting him on a run; but he was brought up before he had proceeded far by one of the bystanders; after he had spent his anger, he went to the crossing after the train had passed.

The friends and patrons of Hazen A. Spaulding, were regaled with a fine glass of soda, last Saturday evening, from the elegant new fountain, which he has put in. The fountain is fitted up with all the latest improvements, and is located in the front of his store. Silver drinking cups, an elaborate and ornate gas fixture at the top of the fountain—all contribute to its beauty, and is a great addition to his already well appointed store. Star and Vichy water will also be added—and our readers will not forget to call and try it.

On Thursday noon Rev. C. N. Smith, the new Methodist pastor of this town, stopped at the store of A. W. Rogers, Ferry st., Malden, to make a purchase, and, sa he supposes, dropped on the street, or left upon the counter, his pocket book, containg some $350. He did not miss the wallet until he reached Lynn, when he took the next train back to Malden; but the pocketbook was not to be found. Mr. Smith was formerly a resident of Malden, and is the father of Mr. Geo. H. Smith, attorney at law of that city.

At the meeting of the Essex South Conference at Marblehead, last Wednesday, an essay was delivered by Rev Hugh Elder of Salem, condemning church fairs, followed by Rev. Mr. Sperry of this town, endorsing the position. At the business meeting in the afternoon, H. H. Proctor was chosen one of the alternate delegates to the General Association, and Rev. J. W. Colwell one of the Standing Committee of the Conference. The next meeting will be held with the Chestnut Street Society, in Lynn.

A young couple in a wagon with a balky horse, had our sympathy yesterday morning, as they sat in the rain in front of our office. During the excitement the harness was broken, but after a while the animal was pacified, the harness mended, and the party moved on through the driving storm in happiness more imaginary than real.

It has been arranged between the Lynn and Peabody and the Naumkeag Street Railway, that passengers be conveyed between Lynn and Washington street in Salem for fifteen cents each; between Lynn and Beverly, sixteen cents, and between Lynn and the Salem Willows, seventeen cents. The fare between Lynn and Peabody is twelve cents, or five tickets for fifty cents. This low rate of fare will open up a large amount of travel between the points above mentioned.

The new time-table of the Naumkeag Street railway is in force, and the cars during the afternoon will run every fifteen minutes. Until further notice, also, an extra car will leave the office in Salem on Saturday evenings at 10.30 P. M. The last car from the Square to Salem leaves at 10.30 P. M. Last Saturday evening this company ran extras very frequently, and a large patronage was the result. Cheap fares was what did the business, most of the patrons riding for five cents.

The gentleman who gives us this item says, that about six o'clock last Wednesday evening, he was crossing the railroad track near the head of Foster street, when he saw three cartridges that had been placed on the horse car track. Looking around he saw some mischievous boys a short distance off, who, when he started in their direction, ran away. It was a dangerous trick and had the car exploded them, it is more than likely some one would have been seriously injured.

Seizures were made by the police at Martin Brophy's, Mason Street, getting 30 gallons of ale, and 2 qts. rum; Daniel Hogan's, Washington street, 20 gallons ale, 2 qts. rum, 2 qts. whiskey; Hannah Mahoney's, Spring St. Court, 25 gallons ale.

SO. PEABODY.—Mr. J. B. Granger, formerly proprietor of the Naumkeag House, has sold out all his business in Lynn and will remove to Chicago the 1st of June.

Chas. Basford has accepted a position on the L. & B. Railroad, as conductor.

Nothing remains of the old Hotel, except the large brick chimney.

The shooting club will give a glass ball shoot, Decoration day. All are invited to attend.

There will be a musical entertainment at the vestry, next Thursday evening—the proceeds to go towards the building fund.

T. P. Murray will open his store on Lynn St., next Saturday.

An effort is being made by the police to ascertain who is setting the fires in the woods at the south part of the town.

James Dodge killed a black snake in the road near the ice houses last Friday, measuring four feet in length.

Business was rushing on the new Lynn & Peabody Railroad last Sunday. In the afternoon three cars were run each trip and all were crowded. 1972 through passengers were carried and 206 local.

OF ANOTHER AGE.

Gradually Supplanted by a Better Article Certain Old Things are Done Away.

In the general reception room of the Western Union Telegraph building on Broadway, New York, are exhibited the coarse, crude and clumsy instruments of the infancy of the telegraph. They are only relics now. More perfect machinery has superceded them.

Years ago what is now styled the old-fashioned porous plaster did some good service. There was then nothing better of the kind. Now all that is changed. Science and study have gone deeper into the secrets of medicine and produced BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER, which embodies all the excellencies thus far possible in an external remedy. The old plasters were slow—the Capcine is rapid; they were uncertain—the Capcine is sure. Cheaper articles bear similar names. Be careful, therefore, that some thrifty druggist does not deceive you. In the centre of the genuine is cut the word CAPCINE. Price 25 cents.

Seabury and Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Book Notices.

PETERSON'S MAGAZINE for June, already on our table, is an unusually brilliant number, even for this popular lady's book. The principal steel-plate, "Mistress Soft-Eyes," is an exquisite affair, illustrating a most charming story. The colored steel-fashion is very beautiful, and "Peterson," be it remembered, is the only magazine that gives these colored plates, printed from the steel. There is a large colored pattern for a Quilt, in the fashionable German Linen-Thread Embroidery, and more than a score of other designs for the Work-Table. The price is but two dollars a year, with great deductions to clubs, and a handsome premium to the person getting up the club. Specimens are sent, gratis, to those wishing to get up clubs. Address Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A very interesting number of DEMOREST'S MAGAZINE is the June issue. The opening article, which is illustrated, is "Home, Sweet Home, and its Author," contributed by Virginia Titcomb. Jennie June's "How We Live in New York" gives a glimpse of a workingman's home; and the story "Out of the World" is continued. "Home Art and Home Comfort," "Current Topics," various departments treating of fashion, household matters, science and art, and a variety of miscellaneous articles, combine to make Demorest's Magazine for June, a remarkably interesting number. The pictorial department is excellent; the fine steel engraving, "The Palm Offering," being after the celebrated painting by F. Goodall, the noted English artist, and is not only a fine specimen of the engraver's skill, but gives an admirable idea of the style of the great painter.

The Publishers of THE ART INTERCHANGE announce that the "Notes and Queries Department" of that journal is growing so rapidly in popularity that it is somewhat difficult to find space for answers to all the questions addressed to it. They have decided, therefore, to issue an eight-page extra on May 22, thirteen columns of which will be given up to Notes, Queries and Answers, treating, among other subjects, on Artistic Furnishings, Embroidering, Repousse work, Wood Carving, Decorative Oil Painting, Stenciling, Painting on China, and Leather work. The Extra will be furnished free to regular subscribers of The Art Interchange, and can be bought by others through news companies for ten cents, or by addressing the Art Interchange, 140 Nassau Street, New York.

The June number of the NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW opens with an article by Joseph Nimmo, Jr., Chief of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics, on "American Manufacturing Interests." Should this author's advocacy of protective legislation prove distasteful, the reader finds the needed corrective in an article by the Hon. Wm. M. Springer, on "Incidental Taxation," which is an argument for Free Trade. D. C. Gilman, President of John Hopkins University, writes of the "Present Aspects of College Training." Edward Self presents some weighty considerations on the "Abuse of Citizenship." Prof. Isaac L. Rice criticises some of "Herbert Spencer's Facts and Inferences" in social and political science, and Christine Nilsson contributes "A Few Words about Public Singing." Finally, there is a symposium on "The Moral Influence of the Drama," the participants being, on the one side, the Rev. Dr. J. M. Buckley, well known as an opponent of the stage, and on the other, John Gilbert, the actor; A. M. Palmer, theatrical manager; and William Winter, dramatic critic. 50 cents a number; $5 a year. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York.

A store of good things is contained in the June number of the ATLANTIC MONTHLY, and it does credit, as usual, to Mr. Aldrich's taste in selection. The third and last act of Henry James' clever dramatization of "Daisy Miller" is contained in it, and also the conclusion of Miss Sarah Orne Jewett's story, "A Landless Farmer," a contribution in her pleasantest vein. Charles Dudley Warner has a travel sketch on Monserrat, written in his usual happy manner. Mr. Richard Grant White contributes the first part of an international paper, "Mr. Washington Adams in England." "Bridget's Story," by L. C. Wyman, "The Biography of Two Famous Songs," by Amelia Barr, and "Life in Old Siena," by E. D. R. Bianciardi, add to the variety of the contents, while essays on "Morality in the Public Schools," and "Authorship in America," form the pieces de resistance of the number. A poem or two, together with the usual excellent critiques on recent books, and the well-known Contributors' Club, complete a very noticeable number.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE for June is an unusually varied number, profusely and beautifully illustrated. The frontispiece, (illustrating "Faustus"—a poem by S. S. Conant) is from a drawing by E. A. Abbey. Colonel Higginson continues his American History series, treating in this Number—under the title of "The Hundred Years' War"—the numerous conflicts from 1662 to 1762 between the Colonists and the Indians and French. Ernest Ingersoll contributes an article, splendidly illustrated, called "The Home of Hiawatha," describing Minnesota, and giving special attention to the milling industry at Minneapolis. The new novel, "A Castle in Spain," illustrated by Abbey, promises to be a wholesome and popular farce. It will be to most readers a welcome relief from the tedious psychological studies now so prevalent in the literature of fiction. Mrs. Spofford contributes a short story, "The Mount of Sorrow;" Charles Reade a humorous sketch entitled "Rus;" and "A Working-Girl," a brief but interesting story entitled "An Æsthetic Idea." To this varied table of contents is added the always timely and interesting matter in the Editor's Easy Chair, Literary and Historical Records, and Drawer.

Messrs. Palliser, Palliser & Co., of Bridgeport, Ct., the well known Architects and Publishers of Standard works on architecture, have lately issued a sheet containing plans and specifications of a very tasteful modern eight-room cottage with tower, and also with the necessary modifications for building it without the tower, and with but six rooms, if desired. In its most costly form, the outlay is estimated at $3,000; without the tower it has been built for $2,500; and if only six rooms are included, the cost may be reduced to $1,700 or $2,000. Details are given of mantels, stairs, doors and casings, cornices, etc. The publishers have found it the most popular plan they have ever issued, and state that it has been adopted in more than five hundred instances within their knowledge. The same firm issue Specifications in blank, adapted for frame or brick buildings of any cost; also forms of building contract, and several books on modern inexpensive, artistic Cottage plans, which are of great practical value and convenience to every one interested.

THE ELZEVIR LIBRARY.—Among the recent issues of this unique, and in respect to cheapness and beauty of form and typography, really remarkable publication, are the following; "Aristotle," by Sir Alexander Grant; "Plato," by C. W. Collins; "Horace," by Theodore Martin. These are in the famous and excellent "Ancient Classics for English Readers" series, heretofore obtainable only at the price of $1.00 each, but now published in this handsome form for 15 cents each. "The Indian Song of Songs," by Edwin Arnold, author of "The Light of Asia," is published at 6 cents, the cheapest edition heretofore issued being $1.00. We also have the "Life of Alex. H. Stephens," by F. H. Norton, author of "Life of Gen. Hancock," and other works. It contains an excellent portrait, and a fine illustration of "Liberty Hall," Mr. Stephens' famous home. Though a copyright work, paying the usual royalty to the author, it is published at the astonishing price of 10 cents. The last issue is Schiller's celebrated "Song of The Bell," and "Hero and Leander," all for 2 cents. These publications are not sold by dealers generally, but only direct, by the publisher, John B. Alden, 18 Vesey St., New York.

GIVEN AWAY.

We cannot help noticing the liberal offer made to all invalids and sufferers by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. You are requested to call at Spaulding's Drug Store, and get a Trial Bottle free of cost, if you are suffering with Consumption, Severe Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Loss of Voice, Hoarseness, or any affection of the Throat or Lungs. It will positively cure you.

We are utterly surfeited with discussions as to woman's work. Anything is her work that she has a taste for doing and can do well, and the sooner this fact is recognized the better for the world.—Lynn Union.

Now is the time to treat Catarrh of long standing. Ely's Cream Balm reaches obstinate cases, where all other remedies fail. It is not a liquid or snuff and is easily applied. Price 50 cents.

ONLY TWO BOTTLES.—Messrs. Johnston, Holloway & Co., wholesale druggists, of Philadelphia, Pa., report that some time ago a gentleman handed them a dollar, with a request to send a good catarrh cure to two army officers in Arizona. Recently the same gentleman told them that both the officers and the wife of Gen. John C. Fremont, Gov. of Arizona, had been cured of catarrh by the two bottles of Ely's Cream Balm.

FOR THE HAPPINESS OF HOME.

From a Clergyman's Home Comes a Message Containing the Wisdom of Experience.

Home is the centre of the social system. From it proceed the best and purest influences felt in the world, and towards it gravitate the tenderest hopes of humanity. For it all good men labor while their working days last, and around it their last thoughts linger lovingly when those days are done.

Yet home does not usually approach in practice its own ideals. The mother is overtaxed with household duties and the rearing and training of her children, while the father fights the outside battle to win the wherewithal to meet expenses. Sooner or later care and toil leave their marks. It is true enough, as Kingsley sings in the "Three Fishers," that but too much working and weeping brush all the bloom from life's fruit.

Mental anxiety and lack of rest and pleasure induce physical diseases of many kinds; whence the need of a trustworthy tonic to give help and strength in times of need. Among the good women of the land who have found such a sure anchor is Mrs. A. C. George, wife of Rev. A. C. George, D. D., pastor of the Centenary M. E. Church, of Chicago, whose words we have her permission to quote:

"I use PARKER'S GINGER TONIC in my family, and can say that we are highly pleased with it as a tonic. From my experience of its value, I recommend it as a reliable family medicine."

Please note: first, PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not a mere essence of Ginger; second, it contains nothing to create an appetite for intoxicating drinks; third, it is a splendid health restorative for all who suffer from disordered Liver or Kidneys or any disease arising from indigestion and impure blood. Accept no substitute for it. Prices, 50c. and $1 per bottle. It is cheaper to buy the larger size. HISCOX & Co., New York.

A YOUNG OLD LADY.

"Yes, Sir! I'm Younger than any of my Children now," said Mrs. Sarah M. Robinson, of 61 William St., New Haven, Conn.—We Read about this kind of Noble Ladies, but Seldom See them in Society.

"Yes, Sir; I'm younger than any of my children now. I keep up with the times, I read the papers, applaud the victories of old Yale, and don't grow old," were the words of Mrs. Robinson to your reporter when he called at her home. Mrs. Robinson is one of the earnest, go-ahead sort of aged ladies, of whom you read, but whom you so rarely find in modern society. "I've had my share of trouble," she said, "for all my life I've been a sufferer from erysipelas. From this has resulted diseased stomach and inaction of the digestive organs. I've been troubled with dyspepsia, and have had such a weakness of the stomach it has seemed as if I needed something artificial and strengthening. I attribute this to erysipelas, which is constitutional with me. I've been under the physicians's care a great deal during my life, but I never received any permanent benefit I think until I began taking Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, which has proved a perfect restorative in my case. My health is better now than it has been for a long time. I consider Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY an excellent medicine. It is used extensively in this city. I keep it as a family medicine, and rely upon it for I know of the good results of using it."

Your reporter left Mrs. Robinson rejoicing in health and renewed youth, and bestowing merited praise on that which is the source of happiness to thousands, viz: Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Ask your druggist for it. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY has become a household word. Everybody, sooner or later, gets sick, and sickness is both wearisome and costly. FAVORITE REMEDY steps in at this point. It is not expensive and it is efficient. For all diseases of the Blood, Bilious Disorders, Kidney complaints, Constipation, and the aches and ills which make the domestic life of women a cross so hard to bear.

PROBATE NOTICE.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Essex ss. Probate Court.

To all persons interested in the trust created by MARY UPTON and ELIZA SUTTON, both of Peabody, (formerly South Danvers) in said county, by a written instrument dated February 14, 1867, wherein the said Mary Upton and Eliza Sutton gave the sum of two thousand dollars to Henry Poor, Warren M. Jacobs, and Elijah W. Upton, all late of said Peabody, and all now deceased, in trust for the purpose of providing suitable homes or houses for elderly women of said town of Peabody, (formerly South Danvers).

GREETING:

WHEREAS, George H. Poor, G. Fred Osgood, and George M. Foster, all of said Peabody, have presented to said court their petition praying to be appointed trustees under said written instrument, a copy of which is annexed to said petition.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the first Monday of June, next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioners are ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week for three successive weeks in the Peabody Press, a newspaper printed at Peabody, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Thurlow Weed's Autobiography.

Agents are wanted in all parts of the country to canvass for the forthcoming AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF THURLOW WEED. This is a most interesting work, embracing numerous anecdotes of Mr. Weed's early life, and, later, giving many curious facts respecting the inner political history of the country during the half century when his influence was so powerful. An immense sale is expected. Send for circulars and terms to agents.

"Mrs. Davidson will have to advertise for another cook at once," he said.

I could see that he was shocked at my plebeian calling, but joy at finding me outweighed all other emotions.

That was four years ago. Father took me back home, and tried by everything that money could buy or love suggest to make me forget my sorrow. Sometimes Chauncey Temple visited us, and a year after my return home he asked me to be his wife; but I said "no." Another man would have given me up; not so Mr. Temple; he waited patiently.

"I don't ask you to forget the past," he said; but I love you so dearly that I know I can help to make you happier."

Six months ago father said to me,—

"Madge, my daughter, I should be glad to see you the wife of Chauncey Temple. Not that I expect you to forget, but you are young, and would be happier with new interests in life."

Mr. Temple had been several weeks in Albany attending an interminable law suit. That night he said to me,—

"Madge, I will wait forever if need be. I don't want to take Harold's place in your heart; but can you not love me a little, too? As for me, I shall love you always, and none other. Can you not trust yourself to me?"

I thought about it a week longer, and the day he left for home I gave him the final answer. To-morrow—no, to-day; it is past midnight now—I shall be the wife of Chauncey Temple.

RUINS OF ZEBDA.

Instead of going back to the Nazareth road after finishing our examination of this interesting spot, we made for a hill on the summit of which we saw some large blocks of stone betokening ruins. Here we came upon a native excavation, evidently recent. Indeed, we heard later that it had only been abandoned the week before. The natives occasionally find an unopened tomb, and dig into it for treasure. Indeed, it was useless to attempt to disabuse their minds of the idea that we were treasure hunters. On asking them what they had found, they said some red glass bottles, which they had broken to discover what they contained. They had also found the jars, one containing ashes, one earth and one was empty. These they had also smashed. It was enough to make one's mouth water to hear of the destruction of these curiosities so very recently. I implored them if they found any more not to break them, but to bring them to me. They laughed and promised to do so, saying at the same time. "They are so very old that they are not worth anything." This cave was evidently an important one, but the natives finding nothing but the glass and the jars, had blocked up the entrance again, and I had to put off the examination of it to some future time. On the top of the hill there were several sarcophagi, some coffins hewn out of the living rock on the surface, with the stone lid at the side. At one place I saw a huge stone lid about eight feet long, two feet six inches broad at its base, and the same in height, but coming up to a ridge, which was evidently still covering the mortal remains which had originally been placed beneath it. The position of this I have also marked, and propose, at some future time, to remove it by gunpowder and see what is below.

Had it not been necessary to push on in order to reach Nazareth before night, I would have lingered longer at these ruins, which are called Zebda by the natives. They are worthy of a full examination. The whole rocky summit of the hill is evidently honeycombed with cave tombs, many of which had not yet been opened. One of these, some miles further on toward Nazareth, especially attracted my attention. A huge circular stone about two feet in diameter has been rolled into the carved stone entrance to the cave and become tightly wedged. All the efforts of the natives to remove it, and the marks of such efforts were visible, had evidently been unavailing. It needed but a very small charge of dynamite to remove the obstacle which has so successfully resisted the barbarian ingenuity of ages. This I had arranged to do, but on the day fixed for the purpose persistent rain disappointed me. However, it is a treat in store.

SHORT SIGHT AMONG EGYPTIANS.

Mr. D. Forrest, who says he has much experience of the Egyptian fellahin, writes an extraordinary letter to the Times. He declares that it is useless to try to make Egyptians sharp-shooters, for the people are universally short-sighted. They cannot see the bull's-eye in a target at a hundred yards, or the target itself at 300. This is the explanation of their bad practice in action. That the Egyptians are liable to ophthalmia is certain, but this is the first time we have heard of a short-sighted nation. The statement strikes us as prima facie absurd, and yet it is quite possible that eyesight, in the dim light of the north, and the bright light of the south, should become different. The strain to see clearly would, in the former case, be perpetual and hereditary. The difficulty is to believe that sunlight would not affect all eyes in all places, and certainly natives of India, living in a light as keen as that of Egypt, show no inclination to short-sight. Their huntsmen can see like red Indians. There may, however, be a difference which has escaped notice and is worth inquiry, the unusual keenness of sight possessed by Scandinavians being a long-noticed fact. Any difference in length of sight, if universal or very usual, would account for very great difference in plastic art and in the use of color.

TO OWNERS OR KEEPERS OF DOGS.

Extracts from Chapter 102 of Public Statutes:

SECT. 80. Every owner or keeper of a dog of three months old or over shall annually, on or before the thirtieth day of April, cause it to be registered, numbered, described, and licensed for one year from the first day of the ensuing May, in the office of the clerk of the city or town wherein said dog is kept, and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

SECT. 81. An owner of a dog may at any time have it licensed until the first day of the ensuing May; and a person becoming the owner or keeper of a dog after the first day of May, not duly licensed, shall cause it to be numbered, described and licensed as provided in the preceding section.

SECT. 82. The fee for every license shall be two dollars for a male dog, and five dollars for a female dog.

SECT. 87. Whoever keeps a dog contrary to the provisions of this chapter shall forfeit fifteen dollars, five dollars of which shall be paid to the complainant, and ten dollars to the treasurer of the county in which the dog is kept.

SECT. 90. The mayor of each city and the chairman of the selectmen of each town shall annually, within ten days from the first day of July, issue a warrant to one or more police officers or constables, directing them to proceed forthwith to kill or cause to be killed all dogs within such city or town not licensed and collared according to the provisions of this chapter, and to enter complaint against the owners or keepers thereof; and any person may, and every police officer and constable shall, kill or cause to be killed all such dogs whenever or wherever found.

A Letter from the Far West.

NO. II.

The religious status of Montana territory is not commensurate with its intellectual. The primary reason, I presume, is because irreligious men have emigrated from the Eastern States far more than religious—probably a hundred to one. I am quite sure that this proportion holds true in the population of the capital of the territory. As a result, those professing christianity who do emigrate from the East, unless quite firm in their religious principles, are soon merged in the common, irreligious current. It is said that every church in this city except the last formed has been established and supported very largely through the agencies of balls and dancing parties. I am just in receipt of a courteous invitation to a ball, which is one of the events of the season. I have concluded not to attend. I fear if I were to dance the rest wouldn't keep up. Social hops and church cotillions appear to have been considered among the means of grace with many of the fair Helenites. I judge that such a religion must be some what of that Scotchman's type who was found vigorously dancing a jig with one foot. "What's the matter, Sandy?" they enquired. "Well," said he, "one foot belongs to the church and the de'il has the other."

Perhaps the most marked indication of irreligion seen in the territory, was in connection with the recent election of a chaplain in the upper house of the Territorial Legislature, now in session. After a dead-lock of nearly a month in organizing the council—which corresponds to the State Senate—some one proposed a chaplain. A member, whose right to his seat is challenged on account of his previous record, which disfranchises him as a citizen or office holder in the United States, arose and denounced the office and anathematized, with a superabundance of profanity, all its occupants, including his father, and grandfathers on both sides, all of whom, he said, were clergymen. Finally he induced two members to vote with him for the Catholic priest, as the next best thing. He subsequently apologized to the chaplain as having no objection to him personally, but to the office. The honorable (?) member generally keeps too full for utterance, though he talks a good deal, all the same. It is probable that he would have been placed under censure, for his conduct, but for the bad blood stirred in the dead-lock. The President of the Council belongs to the same party—Democratic—and is an alleged Atheist. He impresses me favorably, however, as to his mentality; is a man of moral character and was here before there was any Montana. He is the author of a work on the history of the territory, which I have read from the Public Library. The religious calibre of the Council is not heavy. It is said that the members are more familiar with poker than with prayers and the chaplain endeavors to gauge his orisons to meet their capacity. It is just a little amusing as well as a good deal humiliating to see all the members lighting their cigars and smoking in their seats and even while addressing the chair; whether they cease during the chaplain's prayer or not I can not vouch. It is a sight, I think, never seen elsewhere in the highest branch of the Legislature and, I am told, was never seen here before. Some of the Council are representative men of high character but the body, as a whole, are not. I account for the present morale of the Legislature from the fact that the territory is in a transition state from Democratic to Republican domination, which makes the present Legislature so evenly divided and which will give the ascendency, in a year or two, to the latter party. The lower branch of the Legislature is much more decorous in its recognition of religious proprieties than the upper. The religious status of the lower house, however, is not marked.

The introduction in the House of a Sunday bill for the better observance of the Lord's day has been watched with interest for some time. It received the recommendation of the Governor, in his message, and the endorsement of the better class of citizens. After being staved off from time to time, it came up in a committee of the whole for final discussion. But it was soon loaded down with amendments showing the animous of its opponents far more clearly than their wit and was at length referred to the House without recommendation, which meant its death and which was the best fate for it, under the circumstances. It was ably advocated on its merits, as a law of nature, by a few, and unfortunately advocated as a religious measure by one or two who gave a few slaps at "those who lick the dust of the great blaspheming Bob Ingersoll," which brought to the feet an evident satellite of "the great Bob," and who forthwith entertained the spectators with a lengthy tirade against religion, which had about as much relation to the bill as a Democratic convention has to sobriety, and in which he said that "the Bible says the world is flat, but science has demonstrated by eclipses that it is round." It struck me as a great misfortune that he did not give the chapter and verse of the passage, it would have been so handy for subsequent reference. He also quoted a passage from the writings of Moses, which he said was written 826 years after Moses was dead, and taking that as a sample of the veracity of one portion of the Scriptures, he allowed us the privilege of inferring for ourselves as to the value of the other portions. Again I could not help a passing regret that this man had not lived a few centuries earlier and thus spared learned bibliologists hundreds of years of study and research concerning a book so unauthentic. There is little to expect, in the interests of temperance and religion, from the present Legislature. It was the intention to memorialize the Legislature with petitions from churches and temperance orders, all over the territory, asking for a temperance law which, if passed, would be virtual prohibition. The effort will probably be abandoned as hopeless. Yet in justice it should be said that there are able temperance men in the Legislature. I have met them at church, in social gatherings and private dinners and am persuaded that they are true as steel, and that the passage of measures in the interests of temperance and religion in Montana is only a matter of a little time.

It will be inferred then, that, church building and religious work, generally, in this country, is somewhat at a disadvantage. This is especially so with churches that are late on the ground. The Baptists are the last to occupy the field at Helena, and consequently will have to struggle the harder. They have struck out nobly and commenced something creditable to themselves and superior to anything, here, in the way of church accommodations. I doubt, however, if they can carry it through without aid from the East. A dozen years of experience have taught me that beggars from churches in the West are more numerous than welcome in the East, but I have more sympathy with them now than formerly. With the first churches on the field, however, quite the contrary is true. As a rule the people in a new place want a church and care little what kind it is, so long as it is a church. At a new railroad town forty miles from here, we are building a gem of a meeting house, at a total cost of between three and four thousand dollars. With but little effort, we solicited from interested parties all the money we needed until the building is under way. I expect to easily get enough to complete and furnish it. At present one shanty and the lumber for the new church is all the visible indication of a human habitation there is in the township. It is in the center of one of the most fertile valleys of Montana, is watered by the Missouri river and will be the commercial centre and the railroad connection for all the settlements for fifty miles. House lots are selling from three to six hundred dollars and when the railroad gets there next summer, or in a few months time, the place will number a thousand or more inhabitants. They say "yes, we want a church," and they give readily to the first that comes. It should be said also that while intemperance and irreligion are more out spoken and less covert in the far West than in the East, from this very fact they present an open field and a fair fight which affords a great advantage over the sly thrusts of an enemy in the dark. It is my impression that dignified truth and sincere convictions count as much in the West as in the East. In my voluntary missionary towns ranging from ten to a hundred miles, I hear more profanity and see more drunkenness in one month than I formerly heard and saw in twelve months. But I am every where listened to as attentively as I have ever been and when it is known that I am a clergyman, hotel keepers often refuse to take pay for their entertainment. I recently held the first Protestant service in one of the most noted camps in the territory. The principal hotel is kept by two Catholic girls from Fall River. They were attracted here some years ago by the large wages paid servant girls. They keep a good house and are doing well. They entertained me handsomely, refused my money and gave me a standing invitation to come again at the same price—That's western style.

At Helena, I think religion and temperance are advocated as boldly as in Boston and with far more hopeful prospects. I have now been listened to by more attentive audiences on Sunday, especially on Sunday evenings, often quite filling the place, which is the largest Protestant house of worship in the town.

L. L. WOOD.

The representation of Feuillet's powerful character drama, "A Parisian Romance," is to be continued on the stage of the Park Theatre during the coming week. The audiences that have witnessed the play have given abundant proof of their appreciation of the merits of its special feature—Mr. Richard Mansfield's personation of the Baron de Chevrail—type of the rich old roue who is such an excrescence on the civilization of the time in Paris. The setting is remarkably elegant, the view of the banquet hall in particular being as perfect a stage picture in all its details as managerial liberality has produced n Boston.

A brief season of German Comic Opera will be presented this week at the Boston Theatre. "The Prince Consort," the work in which Manager Conried's company is to make its appearance here, is by Herr Englaender, a talented young German composer of New York, and the Times critic avers that the music "is full of reminiscences of Strauss, but is bright and joyous. The performance of the opera given by the Thalia company is a model of its kind. There are no weak spots in the cast." Herr Adolfi, who made such a hit in "The Merry War," is the only member of the organization known here, but all have a very high reputation, and the slight yet interesting plot of the opera, is likely to receive full justice at the hands of Manager Conried's company.

PRICES OF CLOTHING.

Owing to the cold, backward Spring, the majority of our wholesale customers have made smaller purchases than in former years, and in order to move our enormous stock, rather than make a large discount to the wholesale trade, we prefer to give our patrons a benefit and have shipped over $20,000 worth of Spring Clothing direct from our Wholesale Rooms, 395 Washington Street, Boston, to the

Naumkeag Clothing Store, Salem,

All New, Fresh Goods, manufactured for the Spring and Summer Trade of 1883.

Hundreds of our customers can vouch for the Bargains which we have given them during the past three years in Men's All Wool Six Dollar Suits. Those that we now offer at that price are superior in style, trimmings and fit to any we have ever shown before.

READ THE PRICES.

1 Large Lot of Men's All-Wool Dark Mixed Cassimere Suits thoroughly made and Trimmed, were manufactured to wholesale for $8.00 per Suit. We have decided to give our retail trade a benefit by offering the above goods at $3.00 per Suit, about half price; all sizes from 33 to 44. Remember, warranted All Wool Suits for $6.00.

1 Lot of 500 Men's Fine All Wool Plain and Fancy Mixed Cheviot and Cassimere Suits, representing over 30 different styles of the handsomest goods made this season. The above goods were manufactured to wholesale for $12 and $15; we shall place them on special counters and mark them at a Special Low Price of $10 per Suit, which is one of the greatest bargains we have ever offered since commencing business in Salem. There is not a suit in the lot that can be bought less than $15.00 outside of our store. Remember, your choice of the above 500 suits for $10 00 of our national affairs, that can for a moment justify the misconduct of these men. Whether in the Cabinet or in the Senate, whether in Massachusetts or in Georgia, whether in Maine or in Oregon, whether in the South or in the North, the course of these tricksters and traders, these tramps and tyrants in politics, can be viewed in no other light than that of intrigue, outrage, atrocity.

1 Lot of Men's All Wool Suits for $4.00.

But it may be well for us here to pause. It may be well for us to inquire whether there are not some measures possible to our elective function and our administrative order, according to which, we can bring about in the country a better state of things. If not, then some parts of it might as well now as ever be put under military rule. Torn by the violence of such a struggle as that which but recently convulsed us, it must appear to every candid mind, that calmness and confidence cannot be restored by other than the arts of industry and the blessings of "quietness and assurance," and that these can only prevail and flourish where wisdom is united with vigor and moderation joined to firmness. The worst policy we can pursue is that of faction, and faction is no policy. It is only a headlong blindness that can do nothing more than keep us at Newbury in a tumult of disturbance. The worst thing we can do is to lend our aid to perpetuate a feeling of animosity and to promote the continuance of strife. Every interest of our common civilization calls upon us to forget our differences and dissensions and "in the spirit of unity" draw near to each other.

There are present and active, in various parts of the country, certain influential enemies of the public good. Some of them are the more to be feared because, Judas like, they pretend to better things. Beyond question they are selfish and ambitious and such principles can never be made to consist with the ends of a wise and noble public service. It should certainly be our aim as soldiers and civilians, by the opposition of better principles and by the example of better practices, to counteract the course and overthrow the power of these men. Inspired by whatever attachment we may feel to the Constitution and the laws, it should be ours to vindicate, without fear or favor, the great American doctrine of liberty, the equality of all men in the exercise of the rights of American citizenship, equal burdens, equal honors, equal privileges, equal powers, and equal responsibilities, under the Constitution and according to the laws, to every citizen. In this way, and in no other way, may we hope to efface the recollections of the evils we have suffered and to preserve to ourselves and to our posterity, the blessings which these sufferings have brought us. We are to light the warring nations the way to peace, and how can we do it so well as to grave its divine symbols on our own heraldry, and with olive branches in our own hands, lead the columned march of the generations. We are to show the enslaved world the worth of liberty, and to this end we ourselves are to be beautiful with its peace and glorious with its power. "You are the worthier man," said Æschines to Aristippus, "because though I began the strife you began the peace." Let us rejoice that, as conquerors, it has been ours to offer to our "erring brethren" our friendly and fraternal greetings.

When war is precipitated upon any people, the only recourse is to arms. All honor then to those who rush to the defence of endangered liberty. But when the bloody strife is over, equal honor to those who can lapse cheerfully and charitably into a condition of peace, and who can be magnanimous to their foes. This is for all an honorable course. Enemies in war, friends in peace. It then behooves the people of all parts of the country, to join together in their endeavors to open new channels of intercourse, to widen the domain of their common culture, and to strengthen the bonds and the bulwarks of their enlarged civilization. It especially behooves us of the North to be judicious in our propagandism of the faith of freedom, while it equally behooves the people of the South to seek to repair, by every just means, the damage their ill-advised and bloody treason inflicted upon the land. It behooves us to encourage the spirit of brotherly kindness and patriotic affection, assured that sometime our efforts will bear an abundant fruit. Certainly while we stand to our time-honored defence of liberty, not swerving by a hair's breadth from the principles of our faith and the pledges of our honor, yet it becomes us to distinguish our policies both at home and abroad with "Charity toward all and malice toward none." Good principles and a good administration of them will break down bigotries and overcome prejudices, that would otherwise defy the most determined attack.

Our government is not a despotism, then were we slaves instead of freemen. It is not a commune, then there were nothing but anarchy where now is order. It is not an oligarchy, then the privileged few would command and the unprivileged many obey. It is not a company, nor a co-partnership, then under the varying fortunes of faction and broil, it might continue or it might dissolve. Equally removed from the slavery of any and the licentiousness of all, ours is that happy state where liberty lives in the virtues of the people and where law lends its solemn sanctions to piety and patriotism. Such is our constitution that the most humble may attain to honorable distinction, while the most able and eminent may here find a field for the display of their talents, not surpassed by anything Greece or Rome offered their sages and heroes. After a century of national progress, we have proved what despots have all along denied—the possibility of well-balanced power in a government where every citizen is free to express his opinions and where the honors of rule are open to all. And we are able to say to-day, what we could never before for an hundred years say, our Constitution allows no odious distinctions, grants no exclusive privileges and confers no honors save such as good character and noble actions merit. Great public agitations may for the time being bring one man or another to the surface; but the legal guarantees and the Constitutional possibilities are to all the same. Thus the foundations of our prosperity fall down upon our intelligence and rest upon our integrity. They are laid in the character of our lives and in the administration of our laws, while virtue and industry do not in the long run, fail of their reward.

Thus, as will be seen, we have the control of public matters in our own hands, and while this is so, we have no reason to complain. If anywhere luxurious indulgence tends to break down the public vigor, it is ours, by honesty and economy, to rebuke it. If any where an easy-going indifference works to weaken the power of our social constitution, or to impede the progress of our general prosperity, it is ours to solemnly enforce, by our example, attention to duty. If anywhere the prevalence of fashionable vice and crime would sap our virtues and lay waste our lives, it is ours to show that the commonalty of our people are worthy of better things and made for a nobler destiny. And if anywhere venality and corruption, regardless alike of private character or public good, would endanger our existence, it is ours, when we will, to rise up and with the breath of our indignation blow them to the four winds. We the sovereign people are the power than which there is no other. Our individual and collective virtue is the measure of that power, and it is ours to teach pretenders at home and tyrants abroad the lesson, that to resist this power is to resist the ordinance of God. Every citizen can make his good principles a terror to evil doers, a praise to them who do well. This is the high advantage which our government gives to every citizen; a power mightier, in its organized capacity, than a monarch's dictum and not surpassed by the authority with which Rome in her proudest day ruled the world.

Thus with free institutions and good laws and that general intelligence on which both are founded, it will, in any event, be safe for us to throw ourselves upon the spirit of liberty, as Napoleon, on his return from Elba, depended for protection upon the power of his name and the glory of his arms. We may then be as fearless in the presence of any danger, as was Napoleon before the loaded muskets of the Grenoble Command. Our very faith in liberty will make us courageous, while our sense of virtue will make us strong, and before such strength villainous corruption or bannered treason must melt like frost work in the sun. We may then open a way through any oppositions, with an enthusiasm like that of Winkleried when, on the shores of Sempach, he unlocked the spear-heads of the Austrian lines and breaking through made way for freedom. Such a spirit among our people will ever spurn all gilded bribes, as Milton spurned the Latin Secretaryship under Cromwell, because offered by Charles the Second as the price of liberty. There is something in virtue which the lowest love. There is something in liberty which the highest honor. There is something in intelligence which the vicious hate. There is something in independence which tyrants fear. Shame to our faith in free principles and free institutions, if we are afraid to give their blessing and confer their honors to any son of any soil worthy to receive them.

Let us not then, in accepting and promulgating our doctrine of freedom, be bigots nor cowards. Let us never forget that our institutions belong by a sort of vicarious "divine right" to all. Ours is a nation offering an asylum to the "scattered and peeled" of the whole earth. In proportion as we are true not only to the letter of our Constitutional law—the ample guarantee of our rights, but to the spirit which breathes in it—the source and fountain of its power, the spirit of liberty to all irrespective of race or religion, shall we secure to ourselves the highest honor, and to our nation the most lasting renown. The blood of all races has from the first hallowed our soil to freedom. In our Revolutionary struggle we fought not alone. Our foremost statesmen have, in this respect, read our history aright and have been ready to honor others as others honored us. Many illustrious names grace the annals of the struggle our fathers made to throw off the oppressor's yoke. Montgomery, with native Irish courage, poured out, in our defence upon the heights of Quebec, his precious blood. Pulaski, the stalwart Pole, with whom the love of liberty was a ruling passion, espoused our cause and reddened the fields of Savannah with his blood. De Kalb and Stuben gave their warm German hearts and their wise German counsels to help our struggling arms. Paul Jones brought to our aid a leal Scotchman's stubborn sympathy aiding not a little our too weak power. Kosciusco and Lafayette joined fortunes with us, while Hamilton from the Indies and Gallatin from the mountains of Switzerland spoke eloquent words for us, when to speak them was treason. And now shall we, in our selfishness, be untrue to these facts and this fame of our history? God forbid. Shall we, because of our unfounded fears, deny that glorious doctrine of liberty, according to which our institutions have been upreared to their present commanding eminence? All the voices of history utter their loud warnings against it. Shall we, because of the demands of political cabals, narrow and restrict those privileges of free government which were thus purchased as the birthright of all races and nations? No! a thousand voices of the dead and the living answer, No. Here on American soil there is no Jew nor Gentile, no barbarian nor Scythian, but whosoever will, may according to our Constitution and in conformity to our laws, become with all that implies, an American citizen. So much the Revolution teaches us, it is a lesson to be "ever kept in mind."

And later events have a like teaching. When, nearly a century afterward, our liberties were endangered and our existence as a nation threatened, what happened then? We all know. Brave men of all names and nations, then dwelling in our midst, sprang to arms, glad to lay down their lives in defence of principles and for the preservation of institutions offering them, what no where else they found, equality and fraternity. These things it behooves us never to forget. A double baptism of that blood of which "God hath made all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth" is now upon us, making us more than ever the apostles of freedom and the advocates of the rights of man. We have no time now to call the long roll of names. You know them all, from that of the great captain of our salvation to many a private as brave as he and as deserving of honor. They were men from your own town, men from your own hearts and hearth-stones, men of your own company and command, men who fought by your side and, far out in the front ranks of the deepening fight, fell hurrahing for the old flag; men, the memory of whom is a sacred legacy to the nation, men who if living must not be forgotten, if dead mus not be dishonored.

It is said that the elder Cato wrote a history of the Roman Republic with not a personal name in it. It is only said, the Consul prepared a given law, the general gained a given battle, but who these distinguished personages were is not told us. Such impersonality would not answer the demand our patriotism makes upon the historian of a Republic greater than was Rome in her proudest day. He who writes history for us must needs emblazon his pages with names great as Hannibal's, mighty as Caesar's,

> "Immortal names that
> Were not born to die."

Our laws, our literature, our commerce, our institutions, the spirit of our national life, will, because of what these men did for us, all be different, for, as Channing once said of Sumner we say of our brave soldiery, "They made an historical era for America." As well then think of the subjugation of Africa when Scipio headed the Roman legions and never think of him, as think of America, "proud and potent as she is to-day," and in the progress of her civilization and the glory of her existence among the nations of the earth, separate her from the rank and file of her patriots living and her heroes dead.

And the towns of our commonwealth have generally thought to preserve the memory and to perpetuate the fame of their fallen braves. Pillars have been set up and monuments have been raised in honor of our patriot dead and to remind our people of the times when "bloody treason flourished over us." These monuments are eloquent as would have been Caesar's bleeding wounds could Antony have given them a tongue. But we cannot with cold and chiseled marble adequately monument these men to fame. Inscriptions on granite piles are really "no antidote against the opium of time." Dunces, scoundrels, butchers, tyrants, traitors, may be the subjects of such fame and may be honored with such inscriptions. Trajan's name was on everything he did, yet the people scoffingly called him, "the Pellitory on the wall." Erostratus razed the Temple of Diana at Ephesus to the ground, and in spite of the decree of the citizens that his name should never be mentioned, became immortal for his deed. Alexander leveled the walls of Thebes and broke down her hundred gates, and history is his monument. Philip of Macedon and the regicide who slew him are both immortal, one for his virtue, the other for his vice. Chaucer's "House of Fame" is a magnificent structure built upon a mountain of ice, symbol of coldness, uncertainty, decay. Pope's imaginary "Temple of Fame,"

> "Whose towering summit ambient > clouds concealed," though like Chaucer's "House" founded upon ice yet seemed in the distance to be of stone and shone like Parian marble, and though once well nigh covered with illustrious names yet time and circumstance had made next to nothing of them. It is well to put the names of our dead heroes where every passer by can read them, but all our blazonry cannot give them greater honer than that with which our memory crowns them. Their deeds of bravery, their outpoured blood, their offered lives make for them memorials beside which marble piles and emblazoned shafts sink into insignificance. Our gratitude, more than all our great erections, must be relied on to conserve their fame. If the government endure and the spirit of loyalty "live and breathe" among us, these, when the sculptor's chisel shall have rotted with decay and the marble shaft shall have crumbled into dust, these will keep fresh the glory of our dead.

> * * "They never fail who die
> In a great cause: the block may soke their gore,
> Their heads may sodden in the sun, their limbs
> Be strung to city gates and castle walls,
> But still their spirit walks abroad. Though years
> Elapse, and others share as dark a doom,
> They but augment the deep and sweeping thoughts
> Which overpower all others, and conduct
> The world at last to freedom."

And when we speak of our dead and of their fame, we have need to connect both, in our thought, not only with the nation but with the world. For myself I love to think that the brave men who perished in the war of the rebellion died not for this country alone but for all countries; died to improve the general civilization of the world and to make a wider way for the progress of liberty and for the triumph of the rights of man. Believing this, it is not difficult for me to see how great a thing it was to perish in such a cause. Whoever dies in the defence of liberty, whoever dies for the support and preservation of justice, whoever dies to perpetuate the blessings of good government in the earth, never dies in vain. Whoever thus dies opens the gateways into the domains of a larger existence to the people of every land and age. No matter where such graves may be—an influence like an atmosphere filled with fragrance and struck through with sunbeams rises out of them. The productive power of such an influence is incalculable. The four winds scatter it to the four corners of the earth. New civilizations come of it. Kingdoms of power and empires of freedom are its harvests. The lives out of which such influences come are bound together in everlasting connections. No matter where they began; no matter where they end; no matter how weak they are; no matter how unobserved their course, they contribute to the sum of those influences under the power of which peace is to be established in all the earth. No bargaining of crafty politicians, no fencing of ambitions kingdom builders, no usurpations of pampered tyrants, no narrow policies of unpatriotic time-servers can avail to alienate the power of such lives, or make void their right of way over all countries, and into the midst of all civilizations. They are compacted into that great consistency of virtue whose beautiful form, fairer than a Venus and stronger than a Vulcan, is sublimed from the furnace fires of ages of conflict.

But while we thus think that our heroes perished to make law more just and liberty more universal, we do not forget that our fair fields were the theatre of the bloody struggle and that especially that struggle was a good providence of God to this nation.

Seeing then that we have poured out so much blood and expended such masses of treasure to preserve the nation, have we not a right to demand the maintenance of whatever of loyalty and liberty were implied in the conditions of the rebel surrender? Of one thing we may be sure,—we shall look in vain for peace where there is no peace. And there will never be peace until there is purity. First pure, then peaceable, is the gospel order — peaceable because pure. When right reigns supreme over every foot of the national domain, north south, east, west, then we shall have no longer a tyranny, and the labor of peace. When the power of the rich is the poor no longer a slavery, and when the government becomes in fact what it is in theory, no longer an oligarchy of politicians, who think more of place and power than they do of manhood and its rights, but "a government of the people by the people, and for the people," to the end that equality, fraternity and liberty may be exalted among us; then and not till then shall Peace set her white ensigns in the valleys and on the hills. The larger liberty, the better loyalty, the more widespread prosperity, the mightier power, and the higher honor will assuredly come when our personal industry, our social integrity, our political fair-play and our christian impartiality invite them, and were they to come sooner their coming would be our common misfortune.

Is there not then a duty toward the rising generation laid upon us? Beyond a question there is. We must train our children to keep alive, as much for their sakes as for ours, the fame of our fallen braves. We must train them to love liberty and to honor the institutions and respect the self-assumed obligations of free government. We must early implant in their minds those notions of duty and that reverence for right which will, in their maturity, make them the pillared supports of the country. The power of patriotism, under such a government as ours, by whatever philosophy we may explain it, is conditioned on early education in the doctrines of liberty and on the promotion of common good feeling and general intelligence. The roots of our tree of liberty warm themselves at every hearthstone and twine themselves around every cradle, and every home in the land is under the shadow of this tree. Under our government every freeman is a king and all the people are nobles. The basic principles of our loyalty are not those which under monarchies and empires command obedience. No despot can place his heel on our necks and compel an unwilling subjection. Our homes, our schools, our churches, have cultured us to the belief that resistance to tyrants is obedience to God. Our free institutions have impregnated our atmosphere with inspirations to patriotism alike enobling to our natures and honorable to our land. In this respect, considering the principles upon which our government rests and the constitutional forms of its administration, we are different from the governments of the world. We must depend for the perpetuation of our existence upon the exercise of no law of force, but upon the power of a patriotic public spirit. And where can this spirit be so well kindled and inflamed as where the torches of history light the scenes of other days with a burning and a shining glory? Where can living patriots be so well made as at the graves of dead ones? Where can the priests of liberty better kindle their devotions than where memory keeps its vestal fires burning unconsumed upon altars stained with the blood of heroes now no more upon the earth? Where can our children better learn what a nation is worth than at the graves of those who died to save it? For a century by the annual observance of Independence Day we kept among us the spirit of the old Revolution. Remembering our dead we were taught the love of liberty and from our very cradles consecrated to its defence. It was not therefore strange that, when by the treasonable uprising of those of our own house our existence was imperiled, the first gun of Sumpter, sending its echoes among these northern hills, brought us to our feet, and that kneeling about our hearthstones we vowed that, by all we had to give, by all it was possible for us to do, the insulted flag should be vindicated. It was our boyhood's young patriotism bursting forth like a long slumbering volcano. It was the spirit of Lexington and Bunker Hill and Saratoga and Yorktown preserved to us in our histories and transmitted to us through our homes. When we were boys we had our share in all manner of gunpowder patriotism, we marched in the bannered processions, our hearts beat to the roar of guns and the noise of martial music, and, young as we were, we knew the meaning of the star-set symbol that floated over us. Such was the old time Independence Day, and such if well observed will be this new Memorial Day. Its lessons will be good for the rising generation. At the graves of their fathers and brothers they will learn what liberty is worth and learn to defend it.

This is the remembrance we may make of our fallen braves. And we may make it to-day and every day, now and evermore. In the nobility of our living among ourselves, in our conduct toward our brethren against whom we took up arms, not because we hated them but because we hated their treason, in the ceaseless vigilance with which we shall now guard our institutions, more than ever, seeing they are hallowed with sacramental blood, entrusted to our care, in these and other ways we may show our regard for our dead. And so as much as in us lies we may keep the peace. And we can afford to keep it. We are the conquerors. Our brows are bound with victor's wreaths. Our arms are now our noblest monuments. Our torn and tattered flags, though grimed with dust and rust, are emblems of our glory and our power, and now even

'Our tongues may hush for aye their noise of war,
And make fair weather in the blustering land."

But yesterday the storm was up and "all was on the hazard," but now the "drums and battle cries" are still lost in the music of the morning star." We hope for nothing now but peace and gentle visitation. Now we vow to help the modest stillness and the hushed humility of peace. And heaven hears our vow to keep the peace. But the peace we keep must be an honorable one weak with no compromise and cheap with no conservatism. Honorably we won our peace, honorably we must keep it. So shall we bless the living and revere the dead.

Our chief dangers are at home. They are among ourselves. They are such as belong to the spirit of our lives. Avarice, ambition, anger, envy, pride, discontent, these are the enemies of the common good fortune we seek for our country. Against this avarice we must oppose a self-denying generosity. Against this ambition we must put the power of a consecrate purpose. Against this envy we must erect a higher standard of brotherly consideration. Against this anger we must pour out the spirit of patience and peace. Against this pride we must put a better knowledge of ourselves. And against this discontent we must exercise our faith in the providence of fortune. By the power of arms we won our peace, by the power of principles we must preserve it, or it must "ascend to heaven." It would be mean now, having carried our banner through the land in triumph, to lower it for the fear of falsehood or in the presence of wrong. As soldiers it would be beneath our dignity, as citizens it would be against our honor. It would be an outrage to liberty and a violation of law all the more horrible to contemplate, because perpetrated in the very sight of our dead and without regard to the protection of those they left to our care. Around these graves our honor as soldiers, our patriotism as citizens must stand guard. Against the lying flatteries of sirens at home, against the intrigues of scape-graces abroad, we must lift up a standard of truth and swear by the eternal heavens that no base contrivances shall be organized to black-guard our soldiers living or dishonor our soldiers dead. Their blood cries to us from the ground, the voice of a martyred host who fought and fell to save every star on the old flag. In low places we must resist all vice, in high places we must condemn all corruption. The altars of a true peace are builded like Gideon's of old, sacred to virtue and religion. Those of a false peace are like Menahem's service when, for a thousand talents, he hawked to the Assyrians the sanctities of Israel. The one gave the country quiet for forty years, the other was only a rotten patchwork.

We see then, comrades, what a glorious calling is ours. We are to defend the liberties our brothers in battle died to maintain. We are not, as the years go by, to forget them. With an ever-increasing fondness we are to cherish their fame. We are not now, the cruel war is over and the days of mulled and sleepy peace have come, to turn away from their graves. Rather must we wet them with our tears and freshen and beautify them with a profusion of flowers. And this we will do. And we will add every office of soldierly kindness to the widows and orphans who are now our wards. We will guard diligently against the incursions of jealousy and revenge, and we will strive with all our might to be at peace, yet we will be ready at a minute's notice should our country call us to her defence. We will say "Peace be to France," peace be to America, but whoever strikes again dies if we hang ten thousand. The Grand Army of the Republic yet sleeps upon its arms ready at the first picket-shot to fall in for the front and sweep the land to the gulf.

Here is the old flag. Here are the brave men who in the time of the nation's peril, taking their lives in their hands and pledging to the cause their fortunes and their honor, went forth from peaceful industries and happy homes to avenge treason's insult to that flag. And nobly was the avengement made. And having made it with many maimed and many dead, gathered here to-day, is it too much that, irrespective of parties or policies, as comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic, we vow together to never be satisfied with the results of the war, until that flag gives protection to every individual sheltered under its ample folds. There it is, with all its stars shining as never before. There it is, its unstained blue more than ever like the sapphire of heaven. There it is, its red crimsoning now with the new laid dyes of patriot blood. There it is, its unsullied white more than ever the symbol of purity and peace. There it is, victorious from a thousand battle fields, a preserved nations ensign of liberty, equality, fraternity,—glorious herald of a political millenium for the world. There it is, the old flag, fling out its radiant folds and, because of your suffering for it and in memory of your dead who died to defend it, rise up and swear that that flag shall be freedom's flag forever.

"THE BRIDAL EVE: OR, ROSE ELMER,' by Mrs Emma D.E.N. Southworth, is one of her most powerful and absorbing novels Mrs. Southworth unquestionably stands at the head of all American fiction writers, for she has always been a great and deserved favorite with all lovers of sterling and intensely interesting romances, while her hold upon the public has strengthened year by year, until her name and novels have become a household word. An entire new, complete and uniform edition of all her works has just been published by T. B. Peterson & Brothers, Philadelphia. comprising, "Ishmael: or, In the Depths," "Self-Raised; or, From the Depths," "How He Won Her," "Fair Play," "Victor's Triumph," "A Beautiful Fiend," "The Missing Bride," "The Spectre Lover," "The Artist's Love," "A Noble Lord," "Lost Heir of Linlithgow," "Tried for Her Life," "Cruel as the Grave." "The Maiden Widow," Family Doom," "The "The Christmas Guest," "The Bride's Fate," "The Changed Brides," "Fallen Pride," "The Widow's Son," "Bride of Llewellyn," "The Fortune Seeker," "The Lost Heiress," "Lady of the Isle," "The Bridal Eve," "The Deserted Wife," "The Three Beauties," "The Fatal Secret," "The Phantom Wedding," "Vivia; or Secret of Power," "Prince of Darkness," "The Fatal Marriage," "Love's Labor Won," "The Gypsy's Prophecy," "Haunted Homestead," "The Wife's Victory," "The Mother-in-Law," "Retribution," "The Two Sisters," "India, or, the Pearl of Pearl River," "Curse of Clifton," "Discarded Daughter," "Allworth Abbey," and "Mystery of Dark Hollow." Mrs. Southworth's novels are all full of the strongest interest, and her works should find a place in every house. They will be found for sale by all first-class Booksellers or copies of any one or all of them will be sent to any one, to any place, post-paid, by the Publishers, on receipt of price.

GOOD CHEER, the bright little monthly published at Greenfield, Mass., by H. D. Watson, at 50 cents a year, brings out an excellent May number. It contains interesting and instructive articles upon American artists and writing for the press; a delightful little natural history sketch by Ernest Ingersoll; a story for boys by W. O. Stoddard; one for older readers by Mrs. M. P. Handy; the third and last installment of the lively serial "The House Opposite;" a story for very little ones by Ada Carleton Stoddard; and poems by H. H. Ballard, Mrs. D. H, R. Goodale, Susan Hartley Swett, Carlotta Perry, Ella Wheeler, Mary A. Barr, Mrs. Clara Doty Bates, George Cooper. Mary D. Brine, Eva L. Ogden, Dora Read Goodale, and others. There is an interesting "Morning Chat with Thurlow Weed," a May-day story, a seasonable article on Arlington, and much fresh and interesting miscellany, including fashion and household notes.

THE ART AMATEUR for June contains the usual charming designs for china painting, including pansies for a plaque, cherry blossoms for a panel, honey-suckle for a vase and columbine for a dessert plate. Some South Kensington borders and a quaint chasuble ornament are provided for needleworkers; there are over twenty monograms, about forty designs for jewellers' use and a page of capital borders from the Cincinnati School of design. Specially attractive articles are those on "Ftretat," with eight pleasing illustrations by Henry Bacon, and on "John La Farge, Artist and Decorator,' with illustrations of his work in mural painting and stained glass, the latter from the Vanderbilt houses. The correspondence columns and "My Note-Book" are specially full and valuable, and the number in general is a worthy beginning of The Art Amateur's fifth year. Price 35 cents; per annum, $4. Montague Marks publisher, 23 Union Square New York.

Wilkie Collins' last story is called "My Lady's Money." In this country it would have been: "Mother-in-Law has got the Stamps," or "The Old Woman is Well Heeled," remarks a paragrapher. All Americans do not employ such outrageous slang phrases as the above. In speaking of Ely's Cream Balm, however, they do say: "it's perfect," "it's as fragrant as flowers, and certain death to catarrh," &c., &c. This Balm is not a liquid or snuff, and is easily applied. Thousands of grateful persons attest its efficacy. "One in our family had catarrh for 8 years," said R. W. Merrill, Sec'y Phœnix Manuf'g Co., Grand Rapids, Mich. "She ineffectually tried other remedies and several specialty doctors in Boston. Ely's Cream Balm has restored her health and hearing; which were considered incurable." Try it, reader. Price, 50 cents.

The Salem Schubert Club, at its annual meeting last week, elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Charles E. Fabens; Secretary and Treasurer, Francis N. Chapman; Directors, Mrs. Charles E. Fabens, Mrs. John C. Towne, Mrs. Geo. B. Ives, Miss A. P. Pitman, Miss P. M. Waldo, Mrs. F. N. Chapman, Dr. Albion M. Dudley, Mr. Theodore M. Osborne; Librarian, William Jelly. The Club begins the new year in a highly prosperous condition.

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and other Persons liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Peabody.

The Assessors of the Town of Peabody hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that their office will be open on and after the first day of May until and including the first day of June, and all persons liable to be taxed in said town are hereby required to bring in at the said office true and perfect lists of all the polls (males twenty years old, and upward), and schedules and estimates of the personal estates for which they are liable to pay taxes.

Copartnerships

having a place of business in Peabody, and also in some other city or town within the Commonwealth, are especially notified to bring in a statement in accordance with the 24th section of the 11th chapter of the Public Statutes. Shipping and business income are not taxable to a firm, but each resident partner must include these items in his individual return.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

"Any mortgagor or mortgagee of real estate may bring in to the assessors of the town or city where such real estate lies," within the time specified in this notice, "a statement, under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagee or mortgagor. When such property is situated in two or more places, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement." (Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882). When a statement in conformity with the law above quoted is brought in, the real estate therein returned will be assessed under sections 14, 15 and 16, of chapter 11 of the Public Statutes. But in cases where the mortgagor of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, NO STATEMENT OR RETURN IS REQUIRED from either mortgagee or mortgagor, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Estates in Trust.

Persons holding estates in trust, whether for minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of persons deceased, have been divided during the past year or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator, or other person interested, is required and warned to give notice of such change; and in default of such notice, will be held to pay the tax assessed, although such estate has been wholly distributed and paid over.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation thereof, and any one neglecting to furnish the assessors with such list within the time above specified will be deemed at a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors, agreeably to the law of the Commonwealth. All persons will take notice that statements of personal property must be in writing, and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board, NOTWITHSTANDING A VERBAL STATEMENT OR INFORMAL WRITTEN COMMUNICATION TO ANY ONE OR MORE OF THE ASSESSORS. [Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 39 and 41.] When a person has failed to bring in a list or schedule of all his taxable property, in conformity to this notice, no abatement of a tax so assessed upon such person for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on personal estate if he had reasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than 50 per cent the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent. [Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 73.]

Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office.

Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.

The attention of the Officers of all Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 217 of the Acts of 1882, as the property of said corporations, both personal and real, will be subject to taxation unless the law is complied with. Blank forms for the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors.

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.

THE Board of Health appointed by the Town hereby make and publish, as required by law,* the following "Regulations for the Public Health and Safety:"—

REGULATION 1ST. It being the duty of the Board of Health, of the Town of Peabody, to make such examination of the premises of persons residing in said town as they shall deem necessary for the public welfare, the Board hereby give no tice and require that all premises within said limits shall be ready for inspection by the Board on and after June 1st, 1883.

REGULATION 2D. No house offal filthly water, dead animals or refuse of any kind, shall be thrown upon the streets by any resident; and no butcher, fishmonger, or vender of merchandise, shall leave any refuse upon the streets of this town.

REGULATION 3D. If, upon inspection, any rubbish, offal, decaying animal or vegetable matter, or filth of any kind be found in, under or about any building, within any yard or enclosure, upon any premises, or in the ponds or water courses of said Town of Peabody, or if any privy or drain be found so discharging as to prove a nuisance, and offensive or deleterious to the public health, the owner or occupant of such property or premises shall be notified by the Board to remove or abate such nuisance within 24 hours after said notice has been served.

REGULATION 4TH. If any owner or occupant of property as aforesaid, after having been duly notified, shall neglect to comply with the requirements of the above section, the Board of Health shall cause any and all nuisances to be removed or abated at the expense of the owner or occupants.

REGULATION 5TH. No hogs or goats shall be kept within the limits of this town, except in pastures, or in enclosures kept free from standing water, and regularly and freely disinfected.

REGULATION 6TH. It shall be the duty of occupants of dwellings in which any person or persons may be sick with small pox, and Physicians attending such cases of small pox, forthwith to notify the Board of Health of the fact.

REGULATION 7TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where small pox exists, or has existed, shall prohibit and prevent the removal of clothes, bedding and upholstering, or other articles from the infected buildings or dwellings, except the removal is made by permission, or under direction of the Board of Health.

REGULATION 8TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Scarlet Fever and Diphtheria exist shall withdraw all children attending school from the same; and the teachers of said schools shall not allow children thus withdrawn to re enter the school until they shall present a certificate from the attending Physician vouching for the safety thereof.

REGULATION 9TH. Night soil carts shall not be allowed to pass through the streets in the thickly settled portions of the town between sunrise and sunset, from May 1st to Nov 1st, without a special permit from the Board of Health.

These Regulations will be Strictly Enforced.

SALEM, MASS.

THERE ARE few of the young men of to-day who look with admiration, possibly upon the Memorial Day observances of the Grand Army, who realize the full significance of this day to the survivors of the war of the rebellion. To them history, now, is the record of their father's and brother's services to the country. Year by year its significance to the body of our citizens becomes less appreciable. It is fitting, therefore, that all the tender memories should be recalled—because of this lack of interest. To those who were participants in the events of the struggle, there is no need to recall them. To those surviving wives and mothers, whose dear ones were absent during the long struggle—some of them absent for ever—there is no need of recollection. They remember the anxiety with which news from the front was sought, how the envelopes of Uncle Sam, covered with colored flags, and army tents and soldiers, were eagerly scanned, and how the days and nights were commingled in toil for the wounded and suffering in hospitals. And when, for a time, these absent men returned, how tenderly they were cherished—how they became the heroes of the hour? Those days are past. But the veterans who march to-day to decorate the graves of those who have passed on, will live over again these scenes. It should be ours to extend sympathy in commemoration of this Memorial Day.

From the silence of sorrowful homes,
The desolate mourners go,
Lovingly laden with flowers
Alike for the friend and the foe;
Under the sod and dew,
Waiting the Judgment Day.
Under the roses the blue
Under the lilies the gray!

THE UNION of the two great cities of New York and Brooklyn by bridge has been accomplished, and it is a wonderful triumph of engineering skill. There are few of our readers who have visited New York by boat during the last ten years, without admiring the progress of this giant span across the waters. It has seemed almost incomprehensible, as its progress has been watched. Ten years hence it will be looked upon as an ordinary event, and the way is doubtless opened for the erection of other like structures, and the connection of cities which are near and yet by the surging confluence of waters far apart.

It is worthy of mention in connection with this bridge, that the engineer to whom was entrusted the work died; he was succeeded by his son, who also contracted a paralytic disease, so that for the last few years, he has been confined to his room. The study of engineering and the progress of the work, has been entered into by his wife with marked devotion, so that with her eyes and her knowledge, aided by the telescope, he has been able to actively superintend the details of its construction. In the festivities of the opening day it was hers to receive appropriate honors. The bridge is now open to foot passengers, and a visit to that city will be incomplete without standing in the midst of its massive masonry, and viewing the waters beneath.

The Danvers Times, which, to quote its own language, was "Bold, Fearless and Independent," and "The only paper which contains the latest town notes," and which "ranks second to none," after the issue of five numbers has quietly subsided, and has not been seen since May 9th. It is easy enough to start a paper—when somebody can be hired to print it on credit—but it requires something besides cheek to keep it going.—Danvers Mirror.

MEMORIAL DAY!

Floral Tribute to the Dead!

EXERCISES IN PEABODY INSTITUTE!

Address of Rev. V. M. Simons.

Flowers For The Brave.

Here bring your purple and gold,
Glory of color and scent!
Scarlet of tulips bold.
Buds blue as the firmament.

Hushed is the sound of the fife
And the bugle piping clear;
The vivid and delicate life
In the soul of the youthful year.

We bring to the quiet dead,
With a gentle and tempered grief;
O'er the mounds so mute we shed
The beauty of blossom and leaf.

The flashing swords that were drawn,
No rust shall their fame destroy!
Boughs rosy as rifts of dawn,
Like the blush on the cheek of joy.

Rich fires of the gardens and meads,
We kindle these hearts above!
What splendor shall match their deeds?
What sweetness can match our love?

ST. NICHOLAS.

Last Sabbath a goodly delegation of the members of our G. A. R. Post, attended religious service at the Universalist church, whither they had been invited by Rev. Mr. Sprague. The altar was profusely decorated with flowers, and the fine singing of the choir, particularly the closing solo of Miss Nellie Hutchinson, of Lynn, was a feature deserving of more than passing mention. Rev. Mr. Sprague preached from Matthew 22:21. "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's." The preacher in opening said it might be thought strange that he, a man of peace, should essay to speak to men of war. It was a paradox only in appearance. We all stand upon the same ground. The blood of the heroes in war was necessary to union and peace—it was the price that must be paid. War for itself is a crime. As a defence of the rights and lives of the people, of the safety and honor of the nation, war is the right and royal road to peace. The church has much to commend in that the rebellion was put down and peace restored. She has nothing but respect for those who fight in defence of the country's liberties—who being dead yet speak. This day was a fitting preparation for the coming Memorial day,—a day of memories. The speaker was glad the name had been changed. The decoration of the graves was a small though significant part, and only a symbolic observance. There are greater things to be emphasized. Not only marble but monuments of praise and honor are to be raised; our principles and institutions are the foundation—the battery of power and defence for the administration of wise laws.

The preacher would speak of the heroes who are dead. It was a question whether we did not owe more to the dead than the living. This Church was built for people—the most of whom are dead; it was built by men who are dead. Many of the great inventions and improvements, the railroad, the steamboat, the telegraph—are works and legacies to remind us of the dead. Greater than these are the bequests of liberty, the state, the Federal Union, left us by those who braved the dangers and hardships—who suffered and died. America's soldiers were the heroic defenders of the Union, the glorified upholders of the nation's constitution. It was the soldier who offered his life. "This I give to my country." He was the barrier between our property and lives, keeping the wolves of secession from devastating our land. The great pyramids of Egypt will crumble to dust before the memory of the conflict of 1861-65 shall be blotted from the world. In what more significant way can we show respect and love to those who were the participants than by setting apart a Memorial day—suspending our vocation, gathering together in one body, and in one spirit, and showing forth gratitude in tributes to their valor.

We owe these heroes honor. War may not always be justifiable, yet we can but honor those who go out to meet the foe. They have done a glorious act. We owe the survivors honor and esteem, because we live and enjoy the result in an united nation; thanks to our soldiers through whose defense we have peace, happiness and prosperity. We owe the soldier also an imitation of his conduct, and of his loyalty to principle. We need to have courage to cross swords if need be,—we need more of the spirit of the past, and should seek to cultivate such a love of country that we shall be ready to do all we can, to go forth to the battle field without delay, if our country is in danger. We are to render to Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's. We are to be loyal to our government. This is the solemn obligation of every man. We are bound by laws of nature to defend and maintain it. Not till our laws are cruel are we to raise hands against it. It is the most lenient and fairest to all. "Ours is a government of the people, for the people, by the people," are the prophetic words of Lincoln. We should imitate those who have fallen in defense of such a government. Its principles should receive the co-operation of all. It should be regarded as a sacred trust,—as a precious legacy which we should hand down to our children. Our government is a grand keepsake, an eloquent memorial of our friends—to be loved because of the sacrifice of those dear men, who "live in the government which they have left." The speaker closed by an eloquent reminder to the members of the Post that this service was a fitting preparation for the duties of the coming Wednesday. He bade them a cordial welcome to the hospitality of Zion, and bade them a hearty God speed. They knew the price of liberty as no one else. They knew what war is—the roar of cannon, the shouts of comrades, the groans and shrieks of the dying,—the joy of meeting. It should be ours to protect and cherish what they have gained. Their names and deeds will ever live in the memory of the present and coming generation.

The remarks of Rev. Mr. Sprague were listened to with marked attention, not only by the members of the G. A. R., but by the congregation present.

To-day the Memorial services were observed in appropriate form by the Post in full numbers. The programme as published in last week's PRESS was substantially carried out. Early in the morning the boys were at headquarters and to the music of the Salem Brass Band, who appeared in their new uniform, they proceeded to the Soldiers' Monument, which was decorated by them. They then marched down Main Street to the Old Monument, whence the cars of the Lynn & Boston Horse Railroad were taken to Cedar Grove Cemetery The graves in West Peabody and the smaller cemeteries were decorated by detachments from the Post, also, during the forenoon, less publicly, perhaps, but none the less lovingly. We give below the complete list of the comrades over whose graves the symbol of "loyalty, fraternity and charity" is planted, and the cemeteries where their bodies repose:

OLD CEMETERY.
Joseph W. Nutting, George H. Shove, William H. Shove.

At the Soldiers and Sailors' Lot in Cedar Grove Cemetery, the impressive service of the Grand Army was rendered, and prayer offered by Rev. Mr. Colwell. On their return a substantial collation was furnished in Upton's Hall, by Samuel G. Southwick, and the boys did ample justice to the viands. In the afternoon, the Post re assembled and proceeded to the Peabody Institute where the public exercises of Memorial Day were celebrated. Seats were reserved for the members of the G. A. R., and the clergymen of the town, who participated also in the exercises, had seats on the platform. The Salem Brass Band were first heard in a selection from Verdi, the General Orders respecting Memorial Day were read by the Adjutant, followed by a vocal selection by a quartette under the direction of Frank W. Stanley, consisting of Misses Grace F. Dalton, Mary K. Felt and Messrs. Frank W. Stanley and Frank W. Taggard. It is needless to say that the rendering of "Comrades, we come once more," by this quartette, was equal to any thing these well known artists have ever done. Rev. Mr. Hudson read passages of Scripture, Rev. Mr. Sprague gave the invocation, after which another piece was given by the quartette. Rev. Mr. Simons, of Springfield, well known to all the audience, was then introduced and enthusiastically received. His address is given in full below. At its close, a Selection was rendered by the Salem Brass Band, prayer offered by Rev. Mr. Smith of the Methodist Church, "America" was sung by the entire body, and the benediction pronounced by Rev. Mr. Walker. The Post then reformed and proceeded to decorate the graves in the Old and Friend's Cemetery, then countermarching to Monumental Cemetery and to the Square, where after dress parade the comrades were dismissed. Potted plants and wreaths were used by the Post for decorating the graves, they being furnished for the G. A. R. by our florist, J. M. Ward. Rev. V. M. Simons, the orator of the day, spoke as follows:

Two quadrenniums ago we were in the midst of the celebration of our centennials. Then Lexington and Concord shared their honors and were crowned with the bays of a people's grateful recollection. Then Ticonderoga revived the cherished fame of the brave commander of the Green Mountain boys, he who with drawn sword thundered his command, "Come out and surrender or I will sacrifice the whole garrison," demanding it in the name of Almighty God and the Continental Congress.

It is well that we thus keep alive among us the spirit of liberty and loyalty. It is well, when occasion offers, that we thus celebrate the events which gave our nation birth. It is well that by such celebrations we hand down to posterity the fame of the heroes who on many a hard fought field died, that those who should come after might enjoy better privileges and pass to paradox of higher honor. It is well to remind ourselves and our generation of the debt of gratitude we owe those martyr spirits, who counted not their lives dear unto them that they might leave their children an inheritance of fame and fortune among the nations of the earth. Parched be the cowardly tongue that refuses to utter its hosanna. Withered be the arm that, when thousands are raised in exultation, hangs motionless. Blasted be the heart that has no thanks for the men of that early struggle amid the bloody throes of which a nation emerged into existence. If in view of such events and such men and such memories, we were to hold our peace, the stones of our streets and our hills would cry out.

I count myself happy, therefore, that, while the people have so recently risen up to renew the memories of the Revolution, you honor me with the privilege of speaking this day of later events. We shall be in no danger of forgetting Sumpter, and the Wilderness, and Lookout, and Gettysburg, and Richmond, even though Concord and Lexington and Bunker Hill and Yorktown, with all their patriotic associations, come back to us. Our second great struggle for the constitutional integrity of our rule will not be likely to be overlooked, nor its importance depreciated so long as our hearts, even after the lapse of an hundred years, still rejoice in and reverence our Declaration of Independence and that Constitution which, as the great charter of our rights and liberties, our fathers gave us. This second struggle is now over. Its issues are, let us hope, mostly determined. We are already well settled into a solid compact of peace. The tides of time and circumstance will sometime bring back to us more of good than, when they receded into an ocean of blood, they swept away. The question now affecting us is not how shall we fight, but how shall we live. It is a question of our relation as citizens and soldiers at home and in times of peace to both the country and the government. To be a good citizen is as high an honor as to have been a good soldier. It is as noble for the soldier, in times of peace, to live well as in times of war to fight well. "For me to live is Christ," is the apostolic phrasing of a doctrine broader than the narrowness of any ecclesiasticism. "He is free," said Cicero, "who lives well," a good teaching but short of the truth. He rather is free who wills to live right and who lives under the protection of institutions making such living possible. There is no type of character marked with higher attributes of noble independence than that founded upon a just sense of personal responsibility, and inspired by a devout anxiety to be found adequate to the demands of the situation in which we may be placed. Only to the baser sort, as Sir James Stephens suggests, is an honorable self-control a galling yoke. Only to those enslaved by avarice, or corrupt with ambition, or mad with passion, is the abdication of self-government a willing sacrifice. The spirit of such uncontrol never makes citizens into good soldiers, nor in turn transforms soldiers into good citizens. Every soldier understands the philosophy of Sir Walter Scott's observation, to the effect, that soldiers are never better pleased than when in perfect order for service, while they dread nothing so much as that "masterly inactivity" which impairs good order and, when long continued, decimates their ranks. As there is no virtue without trial and no honor without integrity, so there is no liberty without law and no government without authority, for character is more than a magnetic will, liberty more than the power of independent action, and integrity more than the pomp of magnificence or the splendor of conquest. As well might genius quarrel with the limits of creative forms, or art presume to disregard the arbitrary conditions of its power and expect success, as any man, soldier or civilian, hope for victory without discipline, or greatness without restraint. Such is the power of government, such the nature of duty, such the value of devotion, such the glory of integrity, and such the boon of chartered freedom. The franchise of such freedom is, in times of peace, a ballot; in times of war, a bullet. The virtue of the one is by fighting to command, that of the other is by living to command. And to this command our present condition of peace and our desire for its continuance imperatively summon us.

It has been gain to our country and to her institutions that, in the time of her need, so many brave men yielded up their lives in her defence. This we shall not be unbelieving enough to doubt nor base enough to deny. The greatness of this gain will, as the swift-rolling years go by, become more apparent, until perchance the events of the Rebellion will, ere long, be celebrated with greater glory than have been those of the Revolution. But whatever good may have been, by our harvest of death, gained and garnered, an equal or an enlarged good will come to every State in the Union, if the great host of our returned soldiery, now covered with their laurels, now immortal with their fame, shall henceforth live to preserve the principles and perpetuate the rights they fought to defend—the principles and rights of Constitutional freedom under a democratic form of government, administered with equal power and equal impartiality over every foot of our broad domain. from the populous Atlantic shore to the far Pacific sea and from the Lakes on the north to the Gulf on the south.

And this is the task to which, in the spirit of loyalty, fraternity and charity, and in the direction of noble endeavor and honest enterprise and with all the energies and agencies at our command, it now becomes our solemn duty to address ourselves. We are to make sure that what we gained in war be not lost in peace. We are to see to it that what we preserved by the power of arms be not, by the subtle arts of diplomacy, wrested from us. We are to look out that the spirit of fellow feeling which now breathes in our free air, be neither on the one hand unduly restrained nor on the other unduly exercised. Eternal vigilance must be the price of preserving to us what our poured out blood and piled up treasure purchased. Whatever differences of view upon special or general questions of administrative government as vested and exercised under the Constitution and the laws may be entertained among us—and every man has an inalienable right to his own opinion and to the loyal expression of it—we shall all agree that there are not wanting unmistakable signs of volcanic upheaval. Military force is sometimes, even when there is no thought of war, necessary to secure the endangered lives of the people, to prevent anarchy and bloodshed and to maintain decency and order. But such force is not, under our form of government, a normal requisite in the exercise of the national authority. We leave such power to the behests of the weak tyranny, that in its enforced usurpations, has need of it, while we devoutly pray that, after many bloody years of its exercise by the cruel governments of the world, the gods may speedily interfere to end it. One thing is certain, violence and terror are not, in times of peace, the best conservators of the public confidence. Wherever distempered leaders foment contention or organize disturbance, no matter what their political complexion—carpet-baggers from the North seeking fame and fortune as the wolf seeks its prey, or malcontents and fire-eaters of the South to whom rapine and murder are a pastime—wherever they are, whoever they are, they deserve only public execration. All good citizens, irrespective of place or party, justly feel incensed at the behavior of these men and with one accord join in demanding that for their crimes against liberty and their treason to society they be punished. I have no soft words to use in their behalf, nor for the consolation of their friends. I have no flattering unction of tender speech to pour upon the polluted consciences of these men. I have no apology to make for their unnatural and unpatriotic leadership; on the one hand, of political tyranny, and on the other, of political misrule. Such is not the nature of my errand here to-day. There is no principle of self-protection, there is no reason of public policy, there is no demand of patriotic service, there is no fear of the common people, there is no danger abroad in the country, in short there is no condition

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Go strew their graves with flowers rare
And mark the hallowed spot;
Where sleep the brave, who are at rest:
That we forget them not.

Again has Mr A. P. Phillips, our former townsman, been bereaved in the loss, by death, of a beloved daughter. On Thursday, the twenty fourth of May, Miss Lillie M. Phillips passed away from earthly scenes. Though suffering entered largely into the experience and discipline of the dear one gone, it was not allowed to check the cheerful, trustful tenor of her useful life. Naturally endowed with a strong mind, fine reasoning power, and pure intellectual taste, had her life been less hampered by disease her career in her chosen vocation of teaching might have proved a brilliant one. As it was, her impress as a teacher was positive. Those, favored here or elsewhere, with her instruction, will ever remember the inspiration caught from her active mind as vividly, intensely it wrought upon themes before them. Seldom equalled was her facility for pleasantly imparting information, rarely excelled her skill and ready tact in adapting knowledge to the minds she sought to lead. Nor was her influence less in the realm of distinctive religious work. The bearing of her christian life was ever onward, outward, upward. Her views of christian living were broad and philanthropic. As earnestly desirous was she to receive and practically appropriate all that was true and good in every movement, as to strive against whatever in it there might be of evil. The Sabbath School was dear to her heart, and always found in her, when physically able, an efficient and successful helper. The presence at her funeral service of the members of her former Sabbath School class, bore delightful witness of the love she had awakened in their boyish hearts. Perhaps no better record of her pure life can be given than these closing words of a sprightly letter, writa few weeks previous to her departure, "I live from day to day, loving the will of the Lord, and so abide in peace." s.

The Concert of War Songs, advertised in another column, will undoubtedly be one of the most interesting gatherings that has occurred in town for a long time. There is sometimes a feeling expressed in times of peace that the patriotic fervor which more exciting times evoke, is weakening, but the enthusiasm with which the rendering of familiar patriotic songs has been greeted, proves the contrary. There are several fine patriotic pieces with which the younger portion of the community are not so familiar, but which recall the tenderest recollections to older people. The various drum and bugle calls which will be given cannot fail to prove of interest to all. The following ladies will lend the aid of their voices to swell the harmony: Miss Nellie E. Boyle of Salem, Mrs. J. P. Fernald of this town, Mrs. Anna Chute of Melrose, formerly of Peabody, and Miss Edith Randall of Quincy. A drum and fife corps will give exhibitions of its skill. A large chorus of well selected male voices will assist, our friends in town kindly volunteering their services. This will be under the direction of Mr. Caleb R. Bill, who is teaching music in our schools. Misses Mary and Isabella Bill will furnish some fine instrumental music. Miss Nellie Bartlett, Miss Bill and Mr. Jacob Young will sssist as accompanists. There is assurance of a large audience, many of whom are coming from Salem.

Miss H. F. Osborne of this town has a fine display of paintings in the Art Exhibition of the Essex Institute in Salem. The Register says, she has an exquisite effect of twilight glow in the Eastern sky, a rosy flush suffusing all the background. A spring sketch just done, too, is full of the tender beauty and suggestiveness of this season, and several other sketches both of figure and landscape, have the delightful quality which we have learned to look for and associate with this artist. On the same screen Mrs. T. M. Osborne gives us a finely felt and executed flower piece, whose motive is wholly inspired by the nature of the plant itself. MissOsborne, too, has a lovely etching of a tree by a bit of rising roadside that is in her best manner and wholly charming. It even does not suffer by the fine Appleton Bown which hangs near; a characteristic bit of the Spring where half-clothed boughs are outlined on a fleecy spring sky, quite in the subtle Corot manner, and all the charm of the springtime gleams reflected in the still pool below. In itself this picture is well worth seeing.

Mr. Frank Nickerson came into the depot last Monday morning on the 9 o'clock train from Lynn. Soon after he discovered that he had lost his wallet containing about eleven dollars and some valuable papers. He had change enough in his pocket to return home.

Last Friday evening quite a number of tanners and curriers, and others interested in the subject, attended a labor rally in the old Town Hall. Mr. Martin Quinlan presided, and introduced to the audience as the speaker of the evening, Mr. F. K. Foster, member of the Cambridge Typographical Union, and also a delegate member of the Central Trades Union. The subject was "Organization," which was ably and eloquently pleaded by the speaker, and his remarks were listened to with great attention. He advocated the organizing of the tanners and curriers, and showed how they could better their condition and increase their wages through a "Union;" and aroused quite a spirit of enthusiasm by his reasonable and pointed arguments. He was followed by Mr. James Tyrone, of the Central Trades, and D. J. Brown, of the Curriers' Union, after which, the hour being somewhat late, the meeting dispersed, well pleased with all the speakers. Another rally is talked of, to be held shortly.

A request has been made by the Lynn & Boston Horse Railroad for the location of a turnout near Tapley's brook. Last Sabbath it was necessary to speed the horses from Washington street to Wyoma, that the cars might pass each other on the turnout now used, while running every half hour, as they did, and will continue to do on each Sunday as per their new time table. The Selectmen have granted permission and work will be begun on it to-morrow morning. It can then be used at other times than Sunday if desired, and by the looks of the patronage it would seem that it will be found necessary to run oftener than once an hour many times during the week.

We have to record the death of Mrs. Priscilla, wife of D. S. Littlefield, which occurred yesterday morning from pneumonia and a complication of other diseases. She had been ill since Sunday before last. Mrs. Littlefield was a member of the Methodist church of this town, a consistent and devoted Christian, and had the esteem and love of all who knew her. Her husband survives her, with three sons, S. S. Littlefield of the firm of Poor & Littlefield, W. Frank Littlefield and C. Augustus Littlefield. Her age was 56 years. Her funeral takes place to-morrow.

David Lynch while intoxicated last Monday, was looking around to get an opportunity to slay somebody, but arriving at John A. Lord's shop on Wallis street, he must have seen himself in the window glass and decided to have it out. In the first round he came off first best and he kicked out seven lights. Coming to time on the second round he went through the window, sash and all. The third round was at the police station the next morning, when he was required to pay a fine of $16 50.

The present term of the State Normal School in Salem, will close on Thursday, June 21st, with public exercises of examination and graduation. We are in receipt of the catalogue of students for the spring and summer term and find the names of the following from this town: Advanced class, Annie Poland; Class A, Lelia I. Tilton, Augusta S. Wilson; Class B, M. Ada Brown, West Peabody; Class C, Susan C. Elliot, Kate E. Wiley; Class D, Henrietta C. Lummus.

"Woodman, spare that tree," should apply to the handsome elm that was cut down in front of Mr. James E. Millea's saloon on Foster street last Friday. It does seem as if there was a growing mania in this town for cutting down the beautiful shade trees on our streets that make travel on the public highway so pleasant. The selectmen have the matter largely in their hands and should carefully consider the subject before giving permission.

We hear complaints that gravel from the Berry pit—the best in town—is being sold to go to Peabody, and a poorer quality used generally on our streets.—We know nothing of the matter, but suppose those who have it in charge can make the desired explanation.—Danvers Mirror. We don't know anything about it, Bro. Shepard, except that you havn't got any gravel there that is too good for Peabody.

By reference to our marriage notices it will be seen that Mrs. Mary Thompson, of this town, was united in marriage, last Wednesday evening, to Mr. Case H. Ring, of Nashua, N. H., an uncle of Col. C. T. Batchelder. Rev. C. N. Smith was the officiating clergyman. Although they have passed the meridian of life, we wish them many years to come in which to enjoy each other's society.

Another well known citizen has passed away, Lyman Holman, whose death took place last Friday night from heart disease. Mr. Holman was a plain, honest man, keen in business transactions and represented the simple and sturdy virtues of the fathers. His business has been principally that of moving buildings, but he had also speculated largely in real estate and accumulated a fortune.

It is always a pleasure for us to be able to notice the enterprise and prosperity of a business man, particularly one who is not unknown to our readers, and in this connection we wish to refer to Mr. JAMES H. RILEY, at No. 11 St. Peter St., Salem. Mr. Riley came to Peabody from Lowell, and in company with Mr. Richard Clapp, opened marble works on Main street, nearly opposite Sutton's wool factory. Three years later the firm dissolved partnership, Mr. Clapp going to Salem. About four years ago Mr. Riley started a shop in Salem, which was run in connection with his Peabody shop until about a year ago, when his whole business was consolidated at 11 St. Peter Street, Salem, he having built up a very large and successful trade in Salem and the surrounding towns. His shop is about thirty feet front and about the same deep. The front part is used as a show room, where is kept constantly on hand a large line of monuments, tablets, headstones, etc., many of them being very beautiful in design and workmanship. Conspicuous among them are some very deep cut work of ivy leaves, flowers and ferns; also double stones with oak for father and wheat for mother, those emblems being beautifully carved. In the rear is the room where the work is performed by skilled workmen. Mr. R. himself is an artist in his line, and in the window is a specimen of his handiwork, in the shape of a black and tan dog carved from life, in Nova Scotia free-stone and mounted on a base of the same stone. Those contemplating purchasing, should inspect his stock.

There are fewer newspaper fights agitating irate editors at the present writing than at any time since we have conned over an exchange list. Is the world really growing better, and are newspapers preparing the way for the millenium, or is it simply because their conductors have come to the conclusion that the outside world takes little or no interest in their petty personal squabbles.

The Universalist society is the first to announce a strawberry festival this season. They have only to announce the event to be assured of a good patronage, as their entertainments have become exceedingly popular. Besides the attractions strawberries have for all of us there will also be given an entertainment consisting of shadow pantomime and minuet dance.

Letters advertised May, 30: Michael Breslin, B.—Post Office, A. M. Costley, James Claxton, Alonzo Hanscom, F. H. Kollock, Patrick Keating, John D. Kirwan, Thomas McElkinny, Harriet Moore, Daniel Murphy, Agusta Naraden, Mrs. John Pringle, Mrs. J. A. Peabody, Martin & Pousland, Patrick Rooney, Jas. Smith, Jennie Turner, Mary A. Teague, Carl E. York.

An amusing scene was witnessed on the square Tuesday morning. Two young men employed in a stable were seen chasing a horse around the square, which had escaped from them; he was caught by a man at the depot and delivered up to them, but they had not got far when he again got away, and the last seen of him he was pacing up Main street.

Patrick Mulligan, an intoxicated individual, who boarded on Wallis street, got "funny" at the dinner table last Sunday, and pleasantly threw a potato at another boarder sitting at the table. The other party didn't see the fun of the thing and retaliated by throwing a cup of coffee at Mulligan's head, making a slight wound. Children love one another.

A young man in this town, named Bert Howard, who had the impression that he was quite a horseman, mounted a horse last week to take a ride. He started down Main street, but had not got far when the horse suddenly stopped, throwing the rider completely over his head. He picked himself up and departed a sadder but wiser man.

A memorial service at the church of Rev. V. M. Simons, in Springfield, was held last Sunday, attended by about 200 Grand Army boys, and a congregation that filled the house. The church was decorated with flags, an eloquent sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. Simons, and the Star Spangled Banner was sung.

On Sundays hereafter, the Lynn & Boston Horse R. R., after 1 o'clock P. M. will leave the square each hour and 35 minutes past each hour, until 10.05 P. M. They leave Lynn at 12 M., 12. 30 P. M., and every half hour thereafter until 9 o'clock. The last car leaves at 10 P. M.

Last Thursday the horse of Mr. Samuel Southwick was taken sick while standing in the rear of his shop and fell in the shafts. Heylingberg's gentlemanly barbers, Charlie and Pat, were quickly on the spot, and—we were going to say assisted the animal to his feet, but they didn't: they only gave advice.

The sixteen or more departments of the store of Almy, Bigelow & Webber are crowded with bargains. Failure to visit this establishment in your purchases, means great pecuniary loss.

OF ANOTHER AGE.
Gradually Supplanted by a Better Article Certain Old Things are Done Away.

In the general reception room of the Western Union Telegraph building on Broadway, New York, are exhibited the coarse, crude and clumsy instruments of the infancy of the telegraph. They are only relics now. More perfect machinery has superceded them.

Years ago what is now styled the old-fashioned porous plaster did some good service. There was then nothing better of the kind. Now all that is changed. Science and study have gone deeper into the secrets of medicine and produced BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER, which embodies all the excellencies thus far possible in an external remedy. The old plasters were slow—the Capcine is rapid; they were uncertain—the Capcine is sure. Cheaper articles bear similar names. Be careful, therefore, that some thrifty druggist does not deceive you. In the centre of the genuine is cut the word CAPCINE. Price 25 cents.
Seabury and Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Book Notices.

The June number of FRANK LESLIE'S POPULAR MONTHLY has the usual abundant supply of charming reading, fully justifying its claim to be among the best, as it is the cheapest, magazine in existence. O. W. Riggs has a fine article, "The Port of New York;" N. Robinson, one descriptive of "St. Paul's Cathedral;" an article on "Sponges" is particularly interesting and instructive. The above are profusely illustrated. There are several illustrated stories, sketches, etc., and a continuation of the serial, "The Beautiful Countess of Clairville." Some admirable poems, paragraphs, anecdotes, etc., are scattered throughout this remarkable publication, together with handsome embellishments, and a colored frontispiece, "The Unwilling Model." A single copy is 25 cents only; $3 a year, sent postpaid. Address, Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

ST. NICHOLAS for June is crowded with pictures, and appropriately ushers-in the summer with an interesting article, by I. N. Ford on the Tribune "Fresh-air Fund," through which so many thousands of poor city children have been enabled to taste the pleasures of a two weeks' vacation in the country. The frontispiece is a charming picture by Miss L. B. Humphrey, illustrating Miss Mary J. Jacques' verses, "Great-grandmother's Garden;" and there is a Decoration Day poem by Celia Thaxter. Frank R. Stockton writes an exciting boy story, "On the Refuge Sands,' with a shipwreck and a rescue; while the girls will be interested in "The Baptist Sisters," by Sarah J. Prichard, which tells of a blue boat, a tornado, and how some money was found in a well. Young natural historians will read with profit Ernest Ingersoll's "A Good Model," and the silk-culturists will turn eagerly to learn about the working of the "Boys' Silk-Culture Association of America," in the "Work and Play" department.

Several of the pictorial features of the June CENTURY are of uncommon interest, like the frontispiece portrait of Tennyson, after Woolner's bust, and the other full-page pictures in the profusely illustrated paper by Edmund W. Gosse on "Living English Sculptors;" also Severn's sketch of Keats in his last illness, accompanied by a sonnet by Miss Edith M. Thomas. Of descriptive interest, beside, are the illustrations with George W. Cable's account of the commercial growth of New Orleans since 1814, under the title, "The Great South Gate." An article which shows that literary subjects will not be neglected in the Century, is the first of two papers by James Herbert Morse on "The Native Element in American Fiction." At this time this discussion of the faults and merits of early American story writers has a special value. Albert Stickney's attack upon the jury system, in last November's Century, meets here with contravention in several letters grouped with a brief rejoinder by Mr. Stickney, under the title, "Both Sides of the Jury Question." Mr. Howells, in the sixth part of "A Woman's Reason," assists the hero and heroine to make up their quarrel and introduces a shipwreck. A racy story by Professor Beers of Yale, called "Split Zephyr," contrasts the aims of a party of students on leaving college, with their views and conditions fifteen years later. "Topics of the Time" discusses "Over-organized School Systems," and "Two Rich Men," meaning William E. Dodge and Peter Cooper. The second bundle of "Open Letters"—the new editorial department—offers pithy remarks on "The Dynamite Policy." "The Galloping Horse in Art, by George Snell, a Boston artist, who upholds the conventional attitudes given to the horse by artists, against the conclusions of the author of "The Horse in Motion."

Before the publication of "Students' Songs" published by Moses King, the Harvard publisher, there was no collection of college music containing the songs which have had their origin, and become popular, within the last ten or fifteen years, not merely at one college but at all the leading colleges throughout the country. All existing collections were out of date. The first editon of "Students' Songs" was prepared with a view to preserving these songs and to making them accessible to all. The success of the book was immediate. For a long time the book has been out of print, and it has been impossible to procure copies anywhere. The many who have tried in vain to obtain a copy of "Students' Songs" will learn with pleasure that a third and greatly enlarged edition of the book is just off the press. The new book comprises the songs of both the first and the second editions, and contains, besides, more than twenty pages of entirely new music, including all the very latest college songs of the day with piano accompaniment. Most of the songs in the book are copy-righted, have never before been printed, and can be found in no other collection. The book is gotten up in excellent style. It makes a handsome quarto of sixty-four pages, nearly sheet-music size, with engraved cover of unique and appropriate design. It is offered to the public as the only collection of the newest and most popular college songs. The new edition of Students' Songs" was compiled by Mr. William H. Hills, Harvard class of '80, and is published by Moses King, Cambridge, Mass. It is sold at the low price of fifty cents.

Prof. D. B. Hagar of Salem presided at a banquet of members of the Psi Upsilon fraternity at the Revere House Boston, on Friday evening, to recognize the semi-centennial of the order.

FOR THE HAPPINESS OF HOME.
From a Clergyman's Home Comes a Message Containing the Wisdom of Experience.

Home is the centre of the social system. From it proceed the best and purest influences felt in the world, and towards it gravitate the tenderest hopes of humanity. For it all good men labor while their working days last, and around it their last thoughts linger lovingly when those days are done.

Yet home does not usually approach in practice its own ideals. The mother is overtaxed with household duties and the rearing and training of her children, while the father fights the outside battle to win the wherewithal to meet expenses. Sooner or later care and toil leave their marks. It is true enough, as Kingsley sings in the "Three Fishers," that but too much working and weeping brush all the bloom from life's fruit.

Mental anxiety and lack of rest and pleasure induce physical diseases of many kinds; whence the need of a trustworthy tonic to give help and strength in times of need. Among the good women of the land who have found such a sure anchor is Mrs. A. C. George, wife of Rev. A. C. George, D. D., pastor of the Centenary M. E. Church, of Chicago, whose words we have her permission to quote:

"I use PARKER'S GINGER TONIC in my family, and can say that we are highly pleased with it as a tonic. From my experience of its value, I recommend it as a reliable family medicine."

Please note: first, PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not a mere essence of Ginger; second, it contains nothing to create an appetite for intoxicating drinks; third, it is a splendid health restorative for all who suffer from disordered Liver or Kidneys or any disease arising from indigestion and impure blood. Accept no substitute for it. Prices, 50c. and $1 per bottle. It is cheaper to buy the larger size. HISCOX & Co., New York.

SOMETHING ABOUT TRIPE.—Occasionally you see a man order tripe at a hotel, but he always looks hard, as though he hated himself and everybody else. He tries to look as though he enjoyed it, but he does not. Tripe is indigestible, and looks like an India-rubber apron for a child to put on. When it is picked it looks like dirty clothes put to soak, and when it is cooking it looks as though the cook was boiling the dish-cloth. On the table it looks like glue and tastes like a piece of oil-silk umbrella cover. A stomach that is not lined with corrugated iron would be turned wrong side out by the smell of tripe. A man eating tripe at a hotel table looks like an Arctic explorer dining on his boots or chewing pieces of frozen dog. You cannot look at a man eating tripe but he will blush and look as though he wanted to apologize and convince you he is taking it to tone up his system. A woman never eats tripe. There is not money enough in the world to hire a woman to take a corner of a sheet of tripe in her teeth and try to pull off a piece. Those who eat tripe are men who have had their stomachs play mean tricks on them, and they eat tripe to get even with their stomachs, and then they go and take a Turkish bath to sweat it out of the system. Tripe is a superstition handed down from a former generation of butchers, who sold all the meat and kept the tripe for themselves and the dogs, but dogs of the present day will not eat tripe. You throw a piece of tripe down in front of a dog, and see if he does not put his tail between his legs and go off and hate you. Tripe may have a value, but it is not as food. It may be good to fill into a burglar-proof safe, with the cement and chilled steel, or it might answer to use as a breast-plate in time of war, or it would be good to use for bumpers between cars, or it would make a good face for the weight of a pile driver, but when you come to smuggle it into the stomach you do wrong. Tripe! Bah! A piece of Turkish towel cooked in axle grease would be pie compared with tripe.—Burlington Hawkeye.

On and after Monday last, passengers between North and South Salem and the Willows, may procure transfer tickets each way on payment of a ten-cent fare.

The Eastern Railroad Corporation has voted to establish a new station on the Gloucester branch, at Ober's Crossing, between Beverly and Pride's Crossing, such a station being desired by the summer residents, who suggest the name of "Beechwood" for it.

The Massachusetts Press Association have arranged for a summer excursion to the Shenandoah Valley and old "Virginia." They will leave Boston June 8th, and return Friday the 15th. They will visit the Luray Caverns, and return via the Natural Bridge, Harper's Ferry, Baltimore and New York. A good time will no doubt be enjoyed by those who are able to leave their business at this early part of the season.

FREE OF COST.
All persons wishing to test the merits of a great remedy—one that will positively cure Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, or any affliction of the Throat and Lungs—are requested to call at Hazen A. Spaulding's Drug Store and get a trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, free of cost, which will show you what a regular dollar size bottle will do.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is
HEYLINGBERG'S
EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.
It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or

A YOUNG OLD LADY.

"Yes, Sir! I'm Younger than any of my Children now," said Mrs. Sarah M. Robinson, of 61 William St., New Haven, Conn.—We Read about this kind of Noble Ladies, but Seldom See them in Society.

"Yes, Sir; I'm younger than any of my children now. I keep up with the times, I read the papers, applaud the victories of old Yale, and don't grow old," were the words of Mrs. Robinson to your reporter when he called at her home. Mrs. Robinson is one of the earnest, go-ahead sort of aged ladies, of whom you read, but whom you so rarely find in modern society. "I've had my share of trouble," she said, "for all my life I've been a sufferer from erysipelas. From this has resulted diseased stomach and inaction of the digestive organs. I've been troubled with dyspepsia, and have had such a weakness of the stomach it has seemed as if I needed something artificial and strengthening. I attribute this to erysipelas, which is constitutional with me. I've been under the physicians's care a great deal during my life, but I never received any permanent benefit I think until I began taking Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, which has proved a perfect restorative in my case. My health is better now than it has been for a long time. I consider Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY an excellent medicine. It is used extensively in this city. I keep it as a family medicine, and rely upon it for I know of the good results of using it."

Your reporter left Mrs. Robinson rejoicing in health and renewed youth, and bestowing merited praise on that which is the source of happiness to thousands, viz: Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Ask your druggist for it. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY has become a household word. Everybody, sooner or later, gets sick, and sickness is both wearisome and costly. FAVORITE REMEDY steps in at this point. It is not expensive and it is efficient. For all diseases of the Blood, Bilious Disorders, Kidney complaints, Constipation, and the aches and ills which make the domestic life of women a cross so hard to bear.

Essex ss. Probate Court.

To all persons interested in the trust created by MARY UPTON and ELIZA SUTTON, both of Peabody, (formerly South Danvers) in said county, by a written instrument dated February 14, 1867, wherein the said Mary Upton and Eliza Sutton gave the sum of two thousand dollars to Henry Poor, Warren M. Jacobs, and Elijah W. Upton, all late of said Peabody, and all now deceased, in trust for the purpose of providing suitable homes or houses for elderly women of said town of Peabody, (formerly South Danvers). GREETING:

WHEREAS, George H. Poor, G. Fred Osgood, and George M. Foster, all of said Peabody, have presented to said court their petition praying to be appointed trustees under said written instrument, a copy of which is annexed to said petition.

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Salem, in said county of Essex, on the first Monday of June, next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioners are ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week for three successive weeks in the Peabody Press, a newspaper printed at Peabody, the last publication to be two days at least before said Court.

Is the time made by Morse Yellow Dock Nov. 3 1, 1882, at Narragansett Park, being the fastest record ever made by any trotting horse in a public race. She is owned by the Morse Yellow Dock Syrup Co., of Providence, R. I., and is an advertising medium for their renowned Remedy for the cure of Kidney and Blood diseases and Dyspepsia. The owners of this young mare have refused a cash offer of Forty Thousand Dollars for her, and anticipate (with a little more age) showing, simply as an advertisement, the fastest trotter the world ever saw.

Miscellaneous.

POPULAR SONGS.

The St. Louis Republican says: "Auld Lang Syne" is popularly supposed to be the composition of Burns, but, in fact, he wrote only the second and third verses of the ballad as commonly sung, retouching the others from an older and less familiar song. "The Old Oaken Bucket" was written by Woodworth in New York city during the hot summer of 1817. He came into the house and drank a glass of water, and then said: "How much more refreshing it would be to take a good long drink from the old oaken bucket that used to hang in my father's well." His wife suggested that it was a happy thought for a poem. He sat down and wrote the song as we have it. "Woodman, Spare that Tree" was the result of an incident that happened to George P. Morris. A friend's mother had owned a little place in the country which she was obliged, from poverty, to sell. On the property grew a large oak which had been planted by his grandfather. The purchaser of the house and land proposed to cut down the tree, and Morris's friend paid him $10 for a bond that the oak should be spared. Morris heard the story, saw the tree, and wrote the song. "Oft' in the Stilly Night" was produced by Moore after his family had undergone apparently every possible misfortune. One of his children died young, another went astray, and a third was accidently killed. "The Light of Other Days" was written to be introduced into Balfe's opera, "The Maid of Artois." The opera is forgotten, but the song still lives, and is as popular as ever. Payne wrote "Home, Sweet Home," to help fill up an opera he was preparing, and at first it had four stanzas. The author never received anything for it, but though the opera was a failure when played in the Covent Garden Theatre, the song took, and over 100,000 copies were sold the first year. In two years the publishers cleared over $10,000 by the publication: and the variations, transcription and imitations have been innumerable. The melody is believed to be a Sicilian air, and Donizetti has a variation of it in his opera "Anna Bolena." Payne was afterward appointed American Consul at Tunis, where he died, and whence his remains the other day were sent to America. Some of his miseries may be guessed from his own words: "How often have I been in the heart of Paris, Berlin, London, or some other city, and have heard persons singing or hand organs playing 'Home, Sweet Home,' without having a shilling to buy myself the next meal, or a place to lay my head. The world has literally sung my song till every heart is familiar with its melody: yet I have been a wanderer from my boyhood, and, in my old age, have to submit to humiliation for my bread." Foster's "Old Folks at Home" was the best song he ever wrote. Over 400,000 copies were sold by the firm that first published it, and the author is said to have received $15,000 for his share in its sale. Christy, the noted minstrel, paid $400 for the privilege of having his name printed on one edition of "Old Folks at Home" as the author and composer. The song is thus often erroneously attributed to him. "Rock me to Sleep" was written by Mrs. Allen of Maine. She was paid $5 for it, and Russell & Co. of Boston, who had in three years gained $4,000 by its sale, offered her $5 apiece for any songs she might write. Some years after, when a poor widow and in need of money, she sent them a song which was promptly rejected. "A Life on the Ocean Wave," by Epes Sargent, was pronounced a failure by his friends. The copyright of the song became very valuable, though Sargent never got anything from it himself. "What are the Wild Waves Saying?" was suggested to Dr. Carpenter by a scene from Dickens' novel, "Dombey & Son," and the music was by Glover. "Poor Jack" was from the pen of Charles Dibdin, the author of the "Lamplighter." "Poor Jack" netted $25,000 for its publisher, and almost nothing for the author.

EFFICACY OF A TRADE DOLLAR.

The Newark Advertiser says: An Italian woman from River street with an unpronounceable name, while engaged in gathering up cigar-butts in Broad street, near the canal, the other morning, was knocked down by a passing wagon. She was carried into Garrigan's drug store unconscious. A hasty examination was made, and it was found that no bones were broken. The police ambulance was telephoned for, as it was feared there might be internal injuries or concussion of the brain. Before the ambulance could arrive the driver of the vehicle which caused the accident, who had been standing by and expressing his sorrow at what was an unavoidable accident, produced a trade dollar. Instantly the woman's consciousness returned. She clutched the coin, vaulted over two clerks who stood in front of her, shouted "Thanka, boss; no mucha hurta; gooda! gooda! no minda run over!" rushed to the door, caught up her bag, ran across Broad street, down Canal to River street, and was home before the astonished clerks could fairly realize what had happened.

OFFERED TO COMPROMISE.

"Can't you give me a pass to St. Louis?" asked a scar-faced man of an Illinois Central official.

"No sir ree bob horse tail by a condemned sight," was the cheerful yet discouraging reply.

"Couldn't do it, eh?"

"Nuck."

"That's tough, and I don't see but what I'll have to compromise. Fill out a pass to Springfield, and I will foot it the rest of the way."—Cheek.

TO OWNERS OR KEEPERS OF DOGS.

Extracts from Chapter 102 of Public Statutes:

SECT. 80. Every owner or keeper of a dog of three months old or over shall annually, on or before the thirtieth day of April, cause it to be registered, numbered, described, and licensed for one year from the first day of the ensuing May, in the office of the clerk of the city or town wherein said dog is kept, and shall cause it to wear around its neck a collar distinctly marked with its owner's name and its registered number.

SECT. 81. An owner of a dog may at any time have it licensed until the first day of the ensuing May; and a person becoming the owner or keeper of a dog after the first day of May, not duly licensed, shall cause it to be numbered, described and licensed as provided in the preceding section.

SECT. 82. The fee for every license shall be two dollars for a male dog, and five dollars for a female dog.

SECT. 87. Whoever keeps a dog contrary to the provisions of this chapter shall forfeit fifteen dollars, five dollars of which shall be paid to the complainant, and ten dollars to the treasurer of the county in which the dog is kept.

SECT. 90. The mayor of each city and the chairman of the selectmen of each town shall annually, within ten days from the first day of July, issue a warrant to one or more police officers or constables, directing them to proceed forthwith to kill or cause to be killed all dogs within such city or town not licensed and collared according to the provisions of this chapter, and to enter complaint against the owners or keepers thereof; and any person may, and every police officer and constable shall, kill or cause to be killed all such dogs whenever or wherever found.

THE

PATENTED JULY 16, 1878.

With this device Windows are balanced without the use of weights and cords, and therefore no long boxes on each side of the sash are required. The adjustment to each window according to the weight of its sash and glass by tightening or loosening of its spring is very simple. It is always easy of access to take out for any desirable adjustment, and is applicable to

ANY KIND OF WINDOWS, WHETHER NEW OR OLD STYLE,

Assisting in the opening and holding them at any point to which the lower sash may be raised, or the upper lowered, for the purpose of ventilation and comfort. The general testimony of those whose houses have been supplied with these fixtures for three years is that they are a great convenience, and SATISFACTION IS WARRANTED.

Dramatic and Musical.

Haverly's Mastodon Minstrels occupy the boards this week at the Boston Theatre, and they boast the adjectives, "united, consolidated, American and European," having recently received the accession of some of the best-liked people in Sam Hague's British minstrel organization. There is now a small army of burnt cork talent under the banner of Jack Haverly, and even the spacious stage of the Boston will be none too large to display the array of forces. The special attraction will be the spectacular extravaganza "Langtry, or, Monsieur Choufleuri and the Jersey Lily." This is said to be extremely funny in plot, and it gives s ope for grand opera selections, excerpts from "Billee Taylor," "Iolanthe" and other light operas, as well as morceaux from the successful dramatic pieces of the time.

The successful career of Mr. B. E. Woolf's opera, "Pounce & Co." will be terminated next Saturday evening at the Bijou Theatre. The fiftieth consecutive performance of the work is to be given to-morrow evening, and a great audience is likely to assemble. Elegant souvenirs are being made ready in honor of the occasion. The season at the Bijou will probably be continuous, except that a week early in September may be taken for the purpose of preparing for the work of the next dramatic year. The "parlor theatre" is delightfully cool, no gas jets being employed, and the ventilation arrangements working very well. Manager Hastings purposes to introduce still other improvements in the Bijou for the special comfort of summer patrons. "The Sorcerer," with a strong cast, is to be presented on June 11, in very elegant and complete style.

The L. A. MAY COMPANY, of Lynn, make their first bow to the PRESS readers to-day. They are located at 137 and 141 Union street, and their first address to the public on our first page will repay perusal. Their store is only a few steps from the Eastern railroad depot and where the horse cars from this town stop. It is one of the largest stores in the state, and is divided into several departments, including stove and kitchen goods, crockery, china and glass ware departments, silver ware department, where are kept all the goods of the Meriden Brittania Company and other first class houses; also hardware of every description, farming tools, oil stoves, ice cream freezers, bird cages, etc. Connected with this immense establishment there is a tin shop and stove store, also a plumbing and piping room, where all work in this line is attended to, and fixtures, etc., supplied. They are selling large numbers of the Eddy Standard Refrigerators which are acknowledged to be the best in the market, which thirty-four years constant use has demonstrated. Among some of the advantages possessed by these refrigerators may be cited the following: They are strongly built, of beautiful design, and perfect in practice. The ice-chamber bottoms contain a strong, wrought-iron ice-rack, and are lined throughout with zinc of the best quality. They contain slate-stone shelves, and there is a free circulation of cold, dry air throughout the provision chamber. The slate shelves are always sweet, clean and cool, and the general construction is such as to prove at all times convenient and easy of access. The family refrigerators are built with double cases, the joints of the inside case being tongued, grooved and glued together, making it equally as tight and strong as the outside and, with the addition of the non-conducting material used in the packing, secures great economy in the use of ice. Goods to the amount of five dollars and upward, are delivered in Peabody free of charge.

PEABODY.

A young son of Dennis Tobey, while fishing at the iron foundry last Saturday, got his hook caught in his hand. It was removed with much difficulty, and the hand was considerably lacerated.

Messer & Warner of this town have under contract the finishing of some thirty or forty thousand sides of leather that was damaged by fire some time ago. The work is being done at Natick.

As Chief police Peasley and Mr. Jos. Miller were raising the flag on the flag staff this morning, the rope broke, letting the flag fall to the ground. That accounts for the flag not being at half mast to-day.

The daily advertising bill for Forepaugh's circus, all things added, including three advance cars, stereopticon, etc., amount to $1500. The entire running expenses amount to $3000 a day, besides salaries.

The following additional liquor licenses have been granted by the Selectmen: Julia Wood, Wm. A. Cullin, Wm. T. Dunney. It was voted that all licenses must be paid for on or before the tenth of June.

"On one trip of the horse cars last Friday from Lynn, there were thirteen babies and as many mothers, and all talking to their babies at the same time," said an old bachelor in relating his experience the other day.

Two ladies took a Lynn car instead of a Salem one one night last week and the mistake was not discovered until the conductor took the fares at Dalton's Court. The ladies were obliged to walk back to the square.

Mr. John M. Berry bought the Upton tannery on Oak street, that was sold at auction yesterday by Odell, for the sum of $3050. He has already had a proposition from a party, who will lease the place if he will put up a morocco shop.

As the shifting engine was backing into the freight yard of Munroe & Arnold's last week, it struck a wagon that was backed up to a car, damaging it to the amount of thirty dollars. The driver, Frank Wilkinson, narrowly escaped injury.

A slight fire was discovered near the side entrance of Hotel Baldwin, Saturday evening, probably caused by someone carelessly dropping a lighted match. It was discovered in time to avert serious consequences and extinguished with a pail of water.

On the evening of May 22, the Board of Government of the Essex Co. Total Abstinence Union visited the C. T. A. Society, of Danvers. Mr. Richard Barry of this town, chairman of the board, entertained the company with a stirring speech.

Last Wednesday fire was discovered in some waste paper in the house of Mrs. Birmingham on Union street, but the lady of the house gave an alarm which brought into the house several men, who saved it from the flames with only a slight damage.

Boys are a nuisance at the new town hall; the other night they went through one of the windows and took possession of the tools belonging to Mr. T. E. Wilson, scattering them about, and then painted the vice with white lead. They should be suppressed.

The comfort of window awnings during warm weather is fully appreciated by those who have them attached to their residence. There are many already that have been put up. Those of Mr. J. Howard Fallon, on Main street, are very pretty in design.

Rev. C. N. Smith, the new pastor of the Methodist church, is commending himself to his people as an able preacher, an earnest worker, and a kind pastor. He cannot fail of being fully appreciated by citizens generally, as he becomes more widely acquainted.

One of the news boys who sells papers at the depot, had a narrow escape from being hurt last Saturday. He had just sold a paper to a man on the train, when the train started, knocking him down; but he was picked up by a looker on in time to avoid serious injury.

The agent for Aquila Cough Drops left a couple of packages on our table last week, and we found them very agreeable and pleasant. They allay irritation in the throat and will be found a reliable remedy. They are for sale at 15 cents per package, at Hazen A. Spaulding's.

Our readers, especially those interested in farming, will take note of the advertisement of Whitcomb & Carter of Beverly. On account of a removal of a portion of their stock, they have made reduced prices in mowing machines, harrows and other utensils. Now is the time when these articles are needed—and now is the time to secure a bargain.

Reith & Co, the well known Milliners of Salem, announce a special invoice of ready trimmed hats and bonnets—at very much reduced prices.

The Train.

CHARLES H. CRANDALL.

HARK!
It comes!
It hums!
With ear to ground
I catch the sound,
The warning, courier-roar
That runs along before.
The pulsing, struggling now is clearer!
The hill-sides echo "Nearer, nearer,"
Till, like a drove of rushing, frightened cattle
With dust and wind and clang and shriek and rattle
Passes the Cyclops of the train!
I see a fair face at a pane.—
Like a piano-string
The rails, unburdened, sing;
The white smoke flies
Up to the skies;
The sound
Is drowned—
Hark!

Yesterday and To-day.

FRANCES HODGSON BURNETT.

(YESTERDAY.)

It is so wide, this great world vaulted o'er
By the blue sky clasping white shore to shore.
And yet it is not wide enough for me!
I love you so—it cannot hold my love.
There is not space in earth or heaven above,
There is not room for my great love and me.

(TO-DAY.)

It is so wide, this great world vaulted o'er
By the sad sky clasping dark shore to shore,
It is too wide—it is too wide for me!
Would God that it were narrowed to a grave,
And I slept quiet, naught hid with me save
The love that was too great for me.

The Flower O' Dumblane.

ROBERT TANNAHILL.

The sun has gane down o'er the lofty Benlomond,
And left the red clouds to preside o'er the scene,
While lonely I stray in the calm summer gloamin',
To muse on sweet Jessie, the flower o' Dumblane.

How sweet is the brier, wi' its saft fauldin' blossom
And sweet is the birk, wi' its mantle o' green;
Yet sweeter and fairer, and dear to this bosom,
Is lovely young Jessie, the flower o' Dumblane.

She's modest as ony, and blithe as she's bonnie—
For guileless simplicity marks her its ain;
And far be the villain, divested of feeling,
Wha'd blight in its bloom the sweet flower o' Dumblane.

Sing on, thou sweet mavis, thy hymn to the e'ening—
Thou'rt dear to the echoes of Calderwood glen;
Sae dear to this bosom, sae artless and winning,
Is charming young Jessie, the flower o' Dumblane.

How lost were my days till I met wi' my Jessie!
The sports o' the city seemed foolish and vain;
I ne'er saw a nymph I would ca' my dear lassie,
Till charmed wi' sweet Jessie, the flower o' Dumblane.

Though mine were the station o' loftiest grandeur,
Amidst its profusion I'd languish in pain,
And reckon as naething the light o' its splendor,
If wanting sweet Jessie, the flower o' Dumblane.

Selected Story.

(From the Fireside Favorite.)

Apple Blossoms.

BY LYDIA DAVIS THOMSON.

"I believe all women are the same—they are jealous, envious and exacting; almost all are frivolous and flighty, or, that worst of any, a 'blue stocking,'—and they have been deceitful ever since the days of our mother Eve."

"This from you, Harold Leighton?" said his friend and listener, Clarence Hawthorne. "Were you not the best man in the world, and always a gentleman where ladies are concerned; in fact a very gallant among them, I should pronounce you a cynic or a confirmed woman-hater."

"Thanking you for the complimentary part of your speech, my friend, and which I think in turn belongs to you, I will say if you choose to attribute to me the term 'woman-hater' I do not object," answered Leighton.

"But, seriously, I cannot agree with you," replied Hawthorne, "for I believe, in fact I know, that there are good and true women in the world, and those devoid of deceit and jealousy—to say the least."

"Ah, that is because you have never been deceived by them, my honest friend," smilingly said Leighton, then added, "but it will take stronger argument than yours to convert me to your theory—but, and if I assented to it? You know the lines

'Convince a man against his will,
He's of the same opinion still.'"

"So, then, you have a will in the matter?" quietly laughed Hawthorne; to which Leighton replied:

"I did not say so; which, if you were a ready listener, you would see. No, it is a 'theory,' if you will, with me, and I still hold to my preconceived opinion, that all women are the same."

"Wait until you see my cousin, Celia Hartwell, to whom I will introduce you this morning, for she will not be caught 'napping' though it is early, and you will sing a different song."

"I shall not change my tune at first sight of your 'paragon of perfection,' I can assure you," teasingly said Leighton, to which Hawthorne good naturedly replied, "I have not said she was this, but you have rightly interpreted my tone which has conveyed the truth of it; nor do I say you will radically change your tune until you know her as I do, and I mean you shall, for were it not that I am her cousin and do not believe in cousins marrying, I should appropriate her all to myself; but as this cannot be, I have vowed that she shall wed the best man in the world, and you, Harold Leighton, are to be the victim of that vow."

"So you have arranged it all nicely; to suit yourself?" laughingly queried his listener.

"Yes," as laughingly, replied Hawthorne, "and what is more, you will be a convert to my opinion and change the song before the year is over."

Here the conversation ended for a time; the speakers were firm friends and never at "swords points" with each other. They had formed an acquaintance in their college days, and now Leighton had lately come to practice law and to be a resident in the city which had always been Hawthorne's home. The two friends were out on a morning ride, and had left the noisy city and even the sleepy village far behind as they found themselves upon an almost vacated country road; for the last half hour they had driven their horses side by side at an even, slow-jogging pace, while they talked together; they had touched upon many and different subjects, and, finally from "woman suffrage" had drifted into a conversation upon women in general. Presently they drove into a shaded avenue that led the way to a handsome farmhouse and here they reined in their steeds, and, alighting, Clarence Hawthorne led the way and entering, unceremoniously, invited his friend to do the same, and after showing him to a seat in the drawing room, himself re-entered the hall and going to the foot of the stairs, called out in a lively manner, "Ceey, pet, cousin, where are you?" And instantly, as he knew it would, a sunny face peered over the banisters at the top, and a sweet, clear, low voice,—that most attractive feature in women—answered "Good morning, cousin Clarence, I thought it was you; who else would be out so bright and early?"

"Well, then, why don't you come down and give a fellow a more cordial greeting?" answered back Clarence in a mock-querulous tone.

A little, clear laugh responded to this and then Celia came swiftly down the stairs, her feet encased in the daintiest slippers, while she wore a morning wrapper of some ethereal hue, with a bunch of apple blossoms half hidden in the soft white lace at her throat, and her shining hair caught back with a silver slide that glittered among the silken meshes. As she reached the foot of the stairs she caught a glimpse of the stranger, and gave a quick, scolding look at Clarence as she thought herself in dishabille, while he gallantly covered the smile upon his lips with his fair white hand as he led the way for an introduction. Celia's confusion was of short duration and every trace of it had vanished when she extended her hand in welcome to Leighton, while he had almost forgotten his gallantry, for the sound of her voice and the simplicity of her toilette had taken effect which had only been heightened by her ease and elegance of manner, and drinking in her beauty he was fast becoming awkward, which the keen eye of his friend detected, and who hastened to dispel it by saying:—

"Come, Ceey, we have ridden far and ridden long and have not yet breakfasted, and are just on the point of starvation; so hasten to show us your hospitality further, and I will vouch for my friend that we will fare sumptuously at your board."

"On this ground, then, laughingly replied Celia, "I must beg to be excused and leave you to further entertain our, or, rather, my guest," and with this she glided noiselessly and gracefully from the room.

"Well, what do you think of her?" queried Hawthorne.

"I do not know her yet," quietly answered Leighton.

"True as steel. And yet, a keen observer would say that you have changed a note in your tune," jocosely said Hawthorne.

But their bantering converse was soon interrupted by a call from Celia to the breakfast room—and gracefully she presided at the table, for, just now Celia was keeping house alone with the servants. The flow of talk during this repast, and the half hour after, while her guests remained, only served to show Leighton that here was one woman, at least, who was not frivolous or flighty, but who could be a ready listener or good conversationalist as the case demanded—but all good things must have an ending, and so must this morning's visit; but it proved to be only the commencement of others, and a week later, one evening, remembering Celia's cordial invitation to come again, Harold Leighton rode over alone to the farmhouse. This time Celia wore a simple white muslin ornamented only with an apple blossom as before, and her hair was smoothly braided and coiled low in the back of her neck; and as Harold again surveyed her dress, he thought her first appearance was perfect as the morning, but now he poetically deemed her "beautiful as the soft summer night," nor was he less satisfied with this visit, which was only another harbinger of the gala days to follow, for, many a leisure day when business was slow, he and his friend were found in Celia's company, but oftener Harold and Celia boated or rode or walked together, or played a quiet game of chess, or sang or read in turn, until Clarence playfully remarked that he "almost regreted his mission, since he was left so much out in the cold," while Harold as yet had found no flaw in his cousin, and as the summer days grew into autumn, and autumn waned into winter, Mrs. Hawthorne invited her niece to pass the winter with her in the city, and Celia gladly acquiesced in her wish, "for, would she not see more of Harold Leighton then?" And here he had a chance to test her true womanhood more thoroughly as they were thrown more together in society, and, during this happy winter, he further changed his views, and sought her companionship for life. The evening that brought this about Celia was sitting with Hattie Dearborne, a friend of the family, in her aunt's pleasant drawing room, and their conversation turned on jealousy and Hattie had said:—

"By the way, what a flirt Harold Leighton is! Whoever gets him for a husband will surely have cause for jealousy—and, yet, I do not comprehend him, for I have understood him to be a confirmed 'woman-hater.'"

Celia was conscious of an inward tremor when she heard one whom she highly esteemed spoken so lightly of, but she calmly answered:—

"I doubt not this comes from mere idle gossip. I am not ready yet to believe this of such a thorough gentleman as Harold Leighton—for, mind you, I make a wide discrimination between a 'flirt' and a gentleman, and for my part, I would not give a straw for a husband who could not wait upon or be agreeable to a lady as the case demanded; but, speaking of jealousy, I cannot agree with you. I hold that no true woman who is sure of the love of her husband, and no man secure in his wife's love, can be jealous. I am not sure how it is when the love is all on one side, but I will say when one marries without security of this on other than his or her own part, does wrong in marrying, and if then there is a cause or only seeming cause for jealousy, they have no right to expect it to be otherwise." As she finished speaking a shadow darkened the doorway, and, as was his wont, Harold Leighton entered without previously knocking, but on seeing the occupants of the room, he withdrew a step, and said:—

"Excuse me, ladies, for interrupting your tete-a-tete. I thought to find only the family here in the twilight, and so entered in my usual homelike manner, and you, Miss Hartwell, know I am a privileged person at your aunt's; but again I say excuse me," and he essayed to go but Celia detained him with the words:—

"You are indeed excusable; please be seated, my cousin and aunt will be here directly," and on the strength of this cordial invitation, he thankfully took the proffered seat, and if he had noticed any confusion on the part of the ladies he soon dispelled any doubts they had of his having heard their conversation, by entering into an agreeable one with them. Presently Miss Dearborn took her departure and as Clarence and his mother still tarried somewhere, Harold and Celia were left alone, and, anon, drawing his chair closer to Celia, Harold commenced talking to her, rather than with her.

"Celia," he said, "permit me to call you so now if never again, I have something to confess to you alone. I was a willing but not a meaning listener to the conversation of you and your friend. Do not be disturbed at this revelation, I hope you will be glad with me that I have heard it, and I want to thank you for so nobly defending me, and to add that I was much pleased with your opinions that followed this, and to own to you that I was once a 'woman-hater;' but one woman has changed me, and that one is your own true self; through you I believe in the sincerity and nobleness of woman, and I came in here to-night with the intention of telling you before I left of my changed views, and how they have ripened into love for you, and to ask for your love in return and that you will become my wife."

For answer Celia quietly placed her hand in his and said:—

"I will; my heart's first and best love is yours."

Raising her hand to his lips for an instant, he replaced it and said, "Thank you, dear one, for this blessed answer," then taking a tiny parcel from its hiding place, he opened it and displayed a ring and brooch; placing the ring upon her finger, he continued, "I add the brooch as a present to my love—you will see its design is an apple blossom; for this flower I owe my present happiness, for, when I first saw you with this for your only ornament, I cannot tell how, but in it I saw you, true to nature, and Nature is perfect."

"Thank you for the gift and the thought; may Heaven help me to give you all the happiness you deserve," answered Celia in a sweet, low voice, nor could she trust herself to say more lest she should break the wondrous spell of love.

Oh, why was the dream to be so soon and rudely broken!

An hour later Celia had repaired to her room, but not to her couch, for she could not yet sleep away her new found happiness, and as she had unconsciously left the door ajar, she could not help being a listener to voices in an adjoining room, for they held her too spell bound to admit of her shutting out the sound, and presently she heard Clarence Hawthorne say:—

"So, Leighton, you are satisfied with my cousin? to say the least of your changed opinion."

"She is perfect," quietly answered Leighton. "And, yet, I want to test you still further," said Hawthorne. "I once heard you remark that all women are jealous, and—" "But have I not just told you," interrupted Leighton, "that one woman is perfect? And to make assurance doubly sure, that I am a thorough convert to your belief, I will add that one hour ago she consented to become my wife."

"Bravo! I heartily congratulate you," said Hawthorne, jumping up and warmly grasping his friend's hand, then reseating himself more quietly added, "but I am not to be foiled in my plan because of this, I assure you. Indeed, there is all the more need of it since what you have told me, as who knows but there may be yet some latent jealousy to arouse; listen, and I will tell you. To-morrow night you know is to see the last ball of the season. Now, while there I want you to take a lady to the conservatory and I will pass that way with Celia, and as I do so, you will just be bending to say something which shall seemingly be intended for the lady's ear alone. I will come upon the scene with Celia, and, I vouch for it, she will appear as cordially to you then as when afterward you meet her alone."

"I cannot do this, I cannot so insult my promised wife! And what, if after all, this should brew mischief," excitedly replied Leighton.

"Ah, there it is. I want to dispel the doubt," quickly answered Hawthorne. And Celia breathlessly waited Leighton's answer, which came slowly with these words:—

"Very well, then; if you doubt me I will consent."

Celia made no outward sign of suffering as she quietly crossed the room, and took from her writing desk paper and pencil and wrote these lines:—

MR. LEIGHTON,—I have unmeaningly heard my cousin's plot and your agreement to it. There would have been no latent jealousy to arouse, and I write this simply to say that the man who could stoop to test the love in which he so lately felt secure, is not worthy of that love. I return the ring and the brooch; the latter is yet unsullied by the would-have-been-wearer. It will be in vain to seek a reconciliation. CELIA HARTWELL.

When Harold called the next evening to accompany her to the ball, her aunt gave him the note and parcel, saying that Celia on the plea of not feeling well had gone suddenly and unexpectedly home.

Without being arrogant or haughty, Celia was proud, and none knew the pain and suffering that lay beneath her smile and cheerfulness, save her cousin, and, but we will not dwell upon the misery of the two who were the cause of this, only hasten to say that Clarence persisted in often calling upon his cousin, but had as yet made no progress toward a hoped for reconciliation with his friend and Celia, for she always warded of any mention of Harold, but, one perfect morning when the air was fragrant with apple-bloom, and Clarence and Celia were sitting together, he drew his chair nearer to her, and taking one fair hand in his he said, "Now, Celia, I am going to talk of Harold, and you must listen," and his stronger will gained ascendency over hers and she quietly listened while he continued, "I do not ask any forgiveness for my villainy, and I would not blame you if you forever despise me, but oh, forgive my friend? He is the best man in the world, and, pardon me, he has suffered more than you have, because he has not only lost your love but bitterly suffers for the wrong he has done. I know this, because I know him in all moods, and once I feared premeditated death to end his misery, for coming upon him suddenly, one morning, I caught him in the act of replacing a volume of Shakespeare's and heard his quotation from that author,

'We mourn in black; why not in blood.'

Feeling my presence rather than seeing me, he turned and with a faint show of interest, presumably, lest I had guessed its meaning, he said, brightly:"—

"Ah, Hawthorne, is it you? Well, you have caught me at my old trick again of quoting something still fresh from reading; but it will at least show you that I have not yet lost all interest in living."

"Oh, Celia, without adding more to this, again I say, you know naught of his misery, for aside from this he is obliged to still attend to his business, while you have no work of necessity laid upon you with which, with suffering, you have to contend. Do not unfit him for for a life of usefulness—again I plead forgiveness for him."

While Clarence had been speaking, Celia had thought quickly and much, and she saw Harold in a new light, as she drank in every word that her cousin had said, and felt more deeply than for aught else, that the sorrow for sin must be the keenest of all earthly sufferings, and she quietly answered, "You may tell him to come."

"Thank you a thousand times for this, dear cousin," said Clarence, "and may I tell him to come this evening?"

"Yes," she quietly replied.

"And, one thing more," he continued, "will you wear the apple blossom in honor of his coming? I know all his thoughts connected with this flower."

"I cannot," said Celia.

"And why not?"

"Because it would show deceit."

"And how? Pray let me ask."

"Well, then, in the first place I have not yet worn one this season, and if I should wear it to-night he will think I have before, and that would be one form of deceit; in the next place, if he should misconstrue the object of the wearing it and deem it as a sign of reconciliation, this would be deeper deception, as neither of you know what I shall say to him."

Hawthorne laughed a little quietly, as he said,

"You are right, Ceey, as you always are, and, after all, it is better so—and now I must leave you to get rested for his coming," and with this Clarence went out, and left her alone with her musings.

In the self-same place at the twilight hour, Celia received Harold Leighton. A little constrained feeling could not be avoided by either when first they met, but afterwards Harold did not wait for any further development of this, but on his knees instantly pleaded forgiveness, and without one word of love; but as with tearful eyes and voice she forgave him, his great love for her overpowered him and he eloquently pleaded for return of the love he deemed forever lost; and as her answer assured him it had never been taken away, he raised her hand to his lips, at the same time rising from his knees, took a seat beside her, and, in the quiet reaction that followed, said,

"Celia, my darling, I miss the apple-blossom—did not your cousin tell you I requested you to wear one, if I was permitted to come?"

"He asked me, indeed, to do so, but did not tell me it was your request; but this would have made no difference since I could not wear it."

"And why not, allow me to ask?"

And Celia told him why, as she had told Clarence in the morning, and when she finished speaking, he said, "Celia, what a true and beautiful woman you are! Through you, as I once said before, I am no longer a 'woman-hater,' and henceforth your sex will always appear in a new and purer light to me."

"So, then, you are a 'convert to my belief,' and sing a different song within the year," sounded the cheery voice of Hawthorne, coming suddenly upon them as Harold finished speaking.

"Yes," laughed Leighton, "it had well nigh drifted into the old music, but the theme of an apple-blossom has set the tune aright."

"Then three cheers for the apple-blossom!" gaily said Hawthorne, as he waved his hat three times and lazily threw himself upon the sofa, just as a shower of apple-blossoms came in at the open window as if to breathe a blessing upon the trio—and with it ends my story.

When the clergyman asked at a church wedding in Henry county, Iowa, if anybody had aught to say why the pair should not be united, a girl arose and said, "I have—he is engaged to me." There was some confusion, but the ceremony was completed.

The scene is laid in a railway carriage—where the passengers are smoking furiously. The eighth passenger, courteously—"I beg your pardon gentlemen but I do hope that my not smoking doesn't inconvenience you."

Miscellaneous.

The Year Without A Summer.

The year 1816 was known throughout the United States and Europe as the coldest ever experienced in this latitude. Very few persons now living can recollect it. The following is a brief summary of the weather during that year: January and February were mild; March was cold; April began warm, but ended in snow and ice. Ice formed an inch thick in May, and fields were planted over and over again till it was too late to replant.

June was the coldest ever known in this latitude; frost and ice were common. Almost every green thing was killed; fruit nearly all destroyed. Snow fell to the depth of ten inches in Vermont, seven in Maine, three in the interior of New York, and also in Massachusetts. There were a few warm days. All classes looked for them in that memorable cold summer 67 years ago. It was called a dry season. But little rain fell. The wind blew steadily from the north, cold and fierce. Mothers knit extra socks and mittens for their children in the spring, and woodpiles that usually disappeared during the warm spell in front of the houses were speedily built up again. Planting and shivering were done together, and the farmers who worked out their taxes on the country roads wore overcoats and mittens. In a town in Vermont a flock of sheep belonging to a farmer had been sent as usual to their pasture. On the 17th of June a heavy snow fell; the cold was intense, and the owner started away at noon to look for his sheep. "Better start the neighbors after me soon, wife," he said in jest before leaving: "being in the middle of June, I may get lost in the snow." Night came; the storm increased, and he did not return. The next morning the family sent out for help, and started in search. One after another of the neighbors turned out to look for the missing man. The snow had covered up all tracks, and not until the third day did they find him on the side of a hill with both feet frozen, unable to move. A farmer who had a large field of corn in Tewksbury built fires around it at night to ward off the frost; many an evening he and his neighbors took turns watching them. He was rewarded with the only crop of corn in the neighborhood. Considerable damage was done in New Orleans in consequence of the rapid rise of the Mississippi River; the suburbs were covered with water, and the roads were only passable in boats. Fears were entertained that the sun was cooling off, and throughout New England all picnics were strictly prohibited.

July was accompanied with frost and ice. On the fifth, ice was formed of the thickness of common window glass throughout New England, New York and some parts of Pennsylvania. Indian corn was nearly all destroyed; some favorably situated fields escaped. This was true of some of the hill-farms in Massachusetts.

August was more cheerless, if possible, than the summer months which preceded it. Ice was formed half an inch in thickness. Indian corn was so frozen that the greater part was cut down and dried for fodder. Almost every green thing was destroyed in this country and in Europe. On the 30th, snow fell at Barnet, forty miles from London. Newspapers received from England stated "that it would be remembered by the present generation that the year 1816 was a year in which there was no summer." Very little corn ripened in New England and the Middle States. Farmers supplied themselves from corn produced in 1815, for seed in the spring of 1817. It sold at from four to five dollars per bushel.

September furnished about two weeks of the pleasantest weather of the season, but in the latter part of the month ice formed an inch thick. October had more than its share of cold weather.

In Europe the summer was cold and rainy, and in France and elsewhere prices of provisions rose to double the usual figure. November was cold and snowy. December was comfortable and the winter following was mild. Frost and ice were common in every month of the year. Very little vegetation was matured in the Eastern and Middle States. The Sun's rays seemed to be destitute of heat during the summer; all nature was clad in a sable hue; and men exhibited no little anxiety concerning the future of this life.

The average price of flour during the year, in the New York market, was thirteen dollars per barrel. The average price of wheat in England was ninety-seven shillings per quarter. Bread-riots occurred throughout Great Britain in 1817, in consequence of the high price of the staff of life.—Congregationalist.

Now fill the air with perfume rare,
O, clover-bloom of June!
From grassy fen and woodlawn glen,
To proud and lowly homes of men,
Blow everywhere,
In blossoms fair,
Thou scented breath of June!

—Ashton Currier.

Miscellaneous.

OLD SONGS VS. NEW.—What has become of the excellent song writers of yore? Or, rather, (since they are all "dead and turned to clay," as the poet expresses it) why has not the present generation furnished some equally as good? The songs originated now-a-days, as a general thing, are trash in comparison with those of ten, fifteen or twenty-five years ago. You doubt the assertion? Cite to me, if you please, a song written within the last ten years that will compare in pathos, purity and genuine good sentiment, with the one commencing,

"Be kind to thy father, for now he is old,
His locks intermingled with gray,
His footsteps now feeble, once fearless and bold,
Thy father is passing away."

Each verse, in honor respectively of father, mother, sister and brother, is replete with exalted sentiment, expressed in choice, but simple words, and I defy anybody who has ever enjoyed the blessings of kind parents, affectionate brothers or sisters, and the endearments of a pleasant home, to listen to the song unmoved, if given with expression and feeling. It is a fit companion for "Home, Sweet Home,"—even superior, in my opinion. Then there are "The Old Oaken Bucket," Wordsworth's gem, which deserves a better setting than the tune to which it is sung; "The Old Arm Chair," "The Queen of the May," "The Irish Emigrant's Lament," "Good News from Home," and a score of others, all affecting and elevating in tone and sentiment, and all of which have done as much good as so many oft-repeated sermons—perhaps more. The War of the Rebellion called into existence some very good battle songs and others pertaining to camp life and experience, but since then there have been none written that have had, or will have, more than an ephemeral existence; and many of the so-called popular songs of the day are positively silly. Having a brief run at concert saloons and variety theatres, they gain their way for a short time to the parlors of the people, and then give way to some new thing equally absurd. Has the musical taste of the American public deteriorated within the last decade? It would seem so, and here is a good field for the song-missionary. Who will be the coming man or woman, to stir the better part of our natures with new ballads worthy of being ranked alongside of those I have mentioned, in word and sentiment, and who the talented musician to give them a setting of notes, rests, etc., that will produce melody equal to "Come Where My Love Lies Dreaming," "The Mariner's Song," and others which were justly favorites, "When you and I were young, Maggie"—in "Auld Lang Syne."—H. E. Rounds.

The nomination of Mr Edward Hamilton to fill the vacancy created by the expiration of the term of service of Mr. C. F. Donnelly as a member of the Board of Health, Lunacy and Charity, is another evidence of the total unfitness of the present Governor for the place he holds. "Welcome recruits, shoot deserters," was his old doctrine as applied to his own personal support. Mr Donnelly, who is superseded, is an Irish Democrat, and, according to all accounts, a very intelligent and efficient member of the present Board of Health, Lunacy and Charity. But he does not believe in the Governor's position on the present question, nor in the truth of the case he is trying to make out. Nobody who knows Butler doubts the unworthy motive which prompts this action.—Salem Gazette.

A VEXED CLERGYMAN.

Even the patience of Job would become exhausted were he a preacher and endeavoring to interest his audience while they were keeping up an incessant coughing making it impossible for him to be heard. Yet, how very easy can all this be avoided by simply using Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Trial Bottles given away at Hazen A. Spaulding's Drug Store.

With all due meekness we venture to suggest that the editorial fling at Gen. Cogswell of Salem in the Boston Journal of a few days since, is hardly in the interest of Republican harmony.—Milford Journal.

Chicago Congregational clergymen have agreed not to marry divorced persons of either sex without the most satisfactory proofs that sufficient cause existed therefor, and that the divorce was obtained in an open and honorable manner.

A GREAT OPENING FOR A REFORM MOVEMENT.—The case of Myra Clark Gaines affords a striking illustration of the necessity of radical reform in the management of law business in this country. This lady, the widow of a distinguished General of the Army, has been for forty years the plaintiff in a suit brought against the city of New Orleans to recover a portion of her patrimony. There have been innumerable trials, decisions, appeals, reversals, but no result. She is now seventy-eight years of age, and has spent the best part of her life in the vain endeavor to establish her rights. The costs of the litigation have fallen chiefly on the defendants, but she must have paid out a fortune in counsel fees. All this is shocking, but it is precisely what happens in nine cases out of ten where there is money to pay lawyers. No matter how just a cause may be, how clear the evidence, how flimsy the grounds of defence, a man can generally stave off or set aside a judgment as long as he is able to pay costs. Lawyers don't like to have things settled, and clients are entirely at their mercy, both in respect of the time they will take, and the prices they will charge. There is no redress for this terrible evil and iniquity except in legislation. The lawyers have all the machinery wherewith to perpetuate the wrongs the people suffer at their hands. What we want in this country is law reform. That is the great desideratum of our age. We can only get it by electing laymen as legislators, and enacting through them, codes that provide safeguards against procrastination. As it is now, law is worse than a farce; it worries the mind, empties the pocket, and enables rascals to cheat their creditors. Moreovor, the courts are open to any adventurer or knave who has the impudence to fabricate a claim against a fellow-being. The calendars are full of suits based upon allegations that are utterly and absolutely false. The fact that they have no stable foundation whatever is not of the least possible moment; they will last just as long as the charlatan who initiated them can find somebody to make his motions. If he happens to be a lawyer, he can do it himself, and then he will have no expense to incur.

We know of a suit that was commenced in the city of New York nearly four years ago. The plaintiff is an impostor; he hasn't the shadow of a shade of claim; even if he had, it would be barred under the statute of limitation; his complaint originally was preposterous in its statement, and absurd in its deductions; and yet this fellow can, and does, go on making and amending complaints, putting in answers and dealing out volumes of the tiresome verbiage in which the most simple meanings are obscured by legal phraseology, and he is precisely as welcome to the ermined gentlemen upon the bench as if he were engaged in a reputable business. Of course he will never recover a penny, but being a "member of the bar" it costs him nothing to try; the burden of expense falls entirely on the innocent parties on whom he is permitted to make predatory warfare. It requires a good deal of patience to endure a system under which outrages of this nature are possible. And yet they are occurring every hour to great numbers of people, and the stolid public do not make any vigorous attack upon them. What a pity it is that the besom of reform cannot be applied where it is most needed. It will be all very well, no doubt, when our civic affairs are so improved that the persons employed to open trunks on the decks of incoming steamships shall all be Harvard graduates and belles-lettres scholars, but it is of vastly more importance that our Courts of Justice (?) should be so far elevated that they will no longer afford protection and asylum to every mock auctioneer or banco steerer who takes a notion to sue somebody on a trumped-up claim. As it is now, these institutions are a scourge to the upright, and a shield to the doers of wrong.—Shoe and Leather Reporter.

The Boston Globe has been devoting time and space to the question of women's rights and wrongs and published a spicy letter from a smart wife who says: "Take my own case. I am a milliner, and I have made between $1500 and $2500 a year in my business for some time past. I married four years ago. My husband is kind and good-looking, but he never learned any trade had no profession and could not average $500 a year. I loved him, however, but I saw that it would not do to depend upon him, so I kept on with my business." So she supports the household and only asks her husband to wash the dishes. We have caused to be inserted a personal in the Globe asking for the address of this fair ribbon twister. If anything should happen to that husband of hers what a wife she would make for a country editor.—Lynn Bee.

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and other Persons liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Peabody.

The Assessors of the Town of Peabody hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that their office will be open on and after the first day of May until and including the first day of June, and all persons liable to be taxed in said town are hereby required to bring in at the said office true and perfect lists of all the polls (males twenty years old, and upward), and schedules and estimates of the personal estates for which they are liable to pay taxes.

Copartnerships

having a place of business in Peabody, and also in some other city or town within the Commonwealth, are especially notified to bring in a statement in accordance with the 24th section of the 11th chapter of the Public Statutes. Shipping and business income are not taxable to a firm, but each resident partner must include these items in his individual return.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

"Any mortgagor or mortgagee of real estate may bring in to the assessors of the town or city where such real estate lies," within the time specified in this notice, "a statement, under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagee or mortgagor. When such property is situated in two or more places, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement." [Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882]. When a statement in conformity with the law above quoted is brought in, the real estate therein returned will be assessed under sections 14, 15 and 16, of chapter 11 of the Public Statutes. But in cases where the mortgagor of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, NO STATEMENT OR RETURN IS REQUIRED from either mortgagee or mortgagor, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Estates in Trust.

Persons holding estates in trust, whether for minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of persons deceased, have been divided during the past year or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator, or other person interested, is required and warned to give notice of such change; and in default of such notice, will be held to pay the tax assessed, although such estate has been wholly distributed and paid over.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation the ref, and any one neglecting to furnish the assessors with such list within the time above specified will be deemed at a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors, agreeably to the law of the Commonwealth. All persons will take notice that statements of personal property must be in writing, and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board, NOTWITHSTANDING A VERBAL STATEMENT OR INFORMAL WRITTEN COMMUNICATION TO ANY ONE OR MORE OF THE ASSESSORS. [Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 39 and 41]. When a person has failed to bring in a list or schedule of all his taxable property, in conformity to this notice, no abatement of a tax so assessed upon such person for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on personal estate, if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent. [Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 73.]

Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office

Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.

The attention of the Officers of all Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 217 of the Acts of 1882, as the property of said corporations, both personal and real, will be subject to taxation unless the law is complied with. Blank forms for the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors.

TOWN OF PEABODY.

BOARD OF HEALTH REGULATIONS.

THE Board of Health appointed by the Town hereby make and publish, as required by law,* the following "Regulations for the Public Health and Safety:"—

REGULATION 1ST. It being the duty of the Board of Health, of the Town of Peabody, to make such examination of the premises of persons residing in said town as they shall deem necessary for the public welfare, the Board hereby give notice and require that all premises within said limits shall be ready for inspection by the Board on and after June 1st, 1883.

REGULATION 2D. No house offal filthy water, dead animals or refuse of any kind, shall be thrown upon the streets by any resident; and no butcher, fishmonger, or vender of merchandise, shall leave any refuse upon the streets of this town.

REGULATION 3D. If, upon inspection, any rubbish, offal, decaying animal or vegetable matter, or filth of any kind be found in, under or about any building, within any yard or enclosure, upon any premises, or in the ponds or water courses of said Town of Peabody, or if any privy or drain be found so discharging as to prove a nuisance, and offensive or deleterious to the public health, the owner or occupant of such property or premises shall be notified by the Board to remove or abate such nuisance within 24 hours after said notice has been served.

REGULATION 4TH. If any owner or occupant of property as aforesaid, after having been duly notified, shall neglect to comply with the requirements of the above section, the Board of Health shall cause any and all nuisances to be removed or abated at the expense of the owner or occupants.

REGULATION 5TH. No hogs or goats shall be kept within the limits of this town, except in pastures, or in enclosures kept free from standing water, and regularly and freely disinfected.

REGULATION 6TH. It shall be the duty of occupants of dwellings in which any person or persons may be sick with small pox, and Physicians attending such cases of small pox, forthwith to notify the Board of Health of the fact.

REGULATION 7TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where small pox exists, or has existed, shall prohibit and prevent the removal of clothes, bedding and upholstering, or other articles from the infected buildings or dwellings, except the removal is made by permission, or under direction of the Board of Health.

REGULATION 8TH. The occupants of buildings or dwellings where Scarlet Fever and Diphtheria exist shall withdraw all children attending school from the same; and the teachers of said schools shall not allow children thus withdrawn to re-enter the school until they shall present a certificate from the attending Physician vouching for the safety thereof.

REGULATION 9TH. Night soil carts shall not be allowed to pass through the streets in the thickly settled portions of the town between sunrise and sunset, from May 1st to Nov. 1st, without a special permit from the Board of Health.

These Regulations will be Strictly Enforced.

THE NEW horse railroad between our town and Lynn has developed an amount of travel which was entirely unexpected. It was anticipated that the road was to depend upon the local travel for its main support. It opened up a new territory—through So. Peabody, and the residents of this portion of our town have been the most anxious for its construction. It is a convenience beyond expression to them, and from its increase and the natural inclination to build on the line of the road, it was expected a good patronage would be established. But thus far, this travel has been almost nothing as compared with the enormous through patronage. Last Sunday the managers ran half hour trips after eleven o'clock in the morning,—two and three cars at a time each way. This increased service seemed as inadequate to the demands of the public as the hourly trips of the previous Sundays. Every car was crowded. The arrangements with the Naumkeag Railroad brought large numbers of patrons to that road, who had bought transfer checks. It may well be questioned if there is any limit to the travel this way, and whether if they should still further increase the number of trips they would not run equally well loaded.

We doubt not the travel is largely for pleasure. But when the season at the Willows commences, if last Sunday is any estimate for a comparison, this road must prepare for even larger patronage, enormous as it has already been. It should also be borne in mind that the season at the beaches has not yet opened—and that all the riding thus far between the two cities has been entirely independent of any travel to summer resorts.

We believe the same result would be seen if a line of track could be built between this town and Danvers. The citizens of the two parts of the old town are comparatively strangers to each other, and well they may be, for communication by rail is very infrequent. A horse railroad—either by an extension of the Naumkeag, or connection with it, would not only open up a local traffic along the line, besides being an accommodation to our residents up Central and Andover streets, but it would establish a connection for the people of Danvers, to both Lynn and Wyoma, and Salem and the Willows. This extension is only a question of time—and it may well be asked if the time is not now. The improvements which have been made during the past ten years in the construction of horse cars has rendered this mode of travel exceedingly popular. The travel on the Lynn road has proved this beyond all question. We believe Peabody is destined to be the center of a chain of horse railroad communication—a circle extending from Lynn to Danvers and through North Salem to the Willows and back again through Salem city. We believe the possibilities of travel by this line of communication are only faintly realized by the managers of either corporation.

THE REFUSAL of the degree of LL. D. to Gov. Butler, by Harvard College, is of no sort of political significance, and will be so regarded by all fair minded people. Harvard College does not stand for the Republican party—nor for any party. Nor can it be said that the political affiliations of Gen. Butler had aught to do with the refusal to confer the degree. It has been previously conferred upon democrats as well as republicans. It was not refused because Gen. Butler falls short in legal attainments. No one denies his scholarship or his learning, as such. But his course with reference to education in the state—his course with reference to the college itself, has not been such as to warrant the board in feeling willing to honor him with the degree. That is all there is to it. He may feel that he has been snubbed—as he undoubtedly was. His friends may try to make political capital out of it—as they will very likely do. But it will not affect Harvard College any more than Mrs. Partington's broom did the Atlantic ocean.

The practice which has prevailed of honoring all governors of Massachusetts with this title is a custom which is honored in this case, more in the breach than the observance. And it is extremely probable that it will lead to the abolition of the custom, and in future the college will confer this honorary title upon whomsoever it considers a true son of the college. Butler is reported to have said that the insult was not to himself, but to the people of Massachusetts. We fancy the people care but little whether Gov. Butler gets an honorary title from Harvard College or not; and he did not get an opportunity to snub the College, as he very likely would have done. The reputation of Harvard College is beyond the power of Gov. Butler to affect, either in his official or private relations. And besides this, whether he gets this title or not, is of little significance, save to himself.

It has been several years since the name of Wellman Osborne, who is not unknown to most of our citizens, has appeared in the advertising columns of the PRESS. This week we take pleasure in referring to his announcement in another column. He has made the boot and shoe business a constant study for the past seventeen years and his West Lynn shoe store has become famous for its wonderful bargains. Now he has opened another at 84 Market St., Lynn, which gives evidence of the energy and enterprise of the man. No trash is laid upon the counters to fill up, but a store containing all the latest styles of goods from the leading manufacturers and the best the market affords is what he offers his customers, and he is thus prepared to supply the surrounding country with anything in his line that may be desired. The largest manufacturers in the different sections of the country, knowing the immense outlet Mr. Osborne has for goods, are anxious to have him sell their goods exclusively and thus all the leading makes are found at his store, and the price placed on these goods cannot fail to make them still more attractive. Mr. Osborne's position has always been, no credit risk, best goods, small profits, square dealings, large sales and uniform treatment to all. Horse cars pass the door.

THE OPINION of the members of the Legislature who visited Tewksbury, seems to be that of surprise that the institution was found in so good a condition. Many had anticipated otherwise, after listening to the allegations made against it. And it cannot fail to excite remark that during all the charges made by Gen. Butler, his Excellency has never taken the trouble to visit the place. It can hardly seem credible that such should be the case, but it is stated for a fact that he has not done so. His knowledge must therefore be entirely hearsay. Is this what is expected of a Governor of the State of Massachusetts, making charges against a public institution of the State, of which he has no personal knowledge, when such knowledge is so easy of access?

In Lynn, at So. Peabody, and all along the line, a station for the accommodation of passengers waiting for the cars is kept open on the Sabbath. Such ought to be the case here. People do not want to stand on the base of the Soldiers' Monument, or around the Square at different points, especially when it is unpleasant weather. The patronage of the road warrants the assurance that such a place will be provided by the Lynn and Boston horse railroad. Thus far the travel over the road has been larger on that day than any other—and it is therefore almost imperative that a waiting room for passengers should be open on the Sabbath.

The Point of Pines is already in trim for visitors, as well as many of the other resorts on the line of the Boston, Lynn & Revere Beach Railroad. The season will be formally inaugurated June 17th, when the famous Ninth Regiment Band of the late Arbuckle will make its first appearance in this vicinity. On the 18th occurs the great Sham Fight, which is to be given under the auspices of Gen. Lander Post 5 of Lynn, who have leased the grounds for that day. Trenches and earthworks are being made, and it will be an occasion which will attract large numbers to this resort. In the evening there will be a representation of the bombardment and capture of Richmond by gunboats, and of the burning of the city.

PEABODY.

If you see a young man in your back yard with pencil and paper in hand, don't think of the lie you had made up for the assessors, because he is only working on the new insurance map.

A petition was in circulation this morning asking the Selectmen to enforce the law, in relation to closing the barber shops on Sunday. All the barbers, with but one exception, expressed themselves in favor of closing.

It has been suggested that the numerous hack drivers at the railroad station purchase a "boot-black's kit," and favor our town with an institution, which it has long needed—a public boot black. Who will move first?

Our firemen are making preparations for a firemen's parade this fall. Steamer 2 and Hose 1 have elected a committee to confer with representatives of other companies. The hat will be passed around when the time comes.

The ladies of the Social Circle connected with the Congregational church, announce a strawberry festival and apron sale in the vestry of their church, Wednesday afternoon and evening, June 13. Ice cream and cake will be for sale.

Curb stone loaferism is getting altogether too prevalent again. These pleasant evenings ought to be available for decent people to walk on Main street without running the gauntlet of a long line of staring and insulting rowdies.

About six o'clock last Thursday evening, a man employed at Proctor's currying shop, fell in an apoplectic fit in front of Mayhew S. Clark's on Wallis street. Several gathered around, but a few companions took charge of him until he came out of it.

The following is the report of the chief police for the month of May: Whole number of arrests, 45; drunkenness, 29; assault, 4; keeping liquor with intent to sell, 3; larceny, 3; truancy, 2; an affray, 2; disturbing school, 1; malicious mischief, 1.

All the brown bread made by Bragdon, our popular baker, is now steamed instead of being baked. It was good before—it beats the world now. Be sure your card is up Sunday mornings. The drivers visit every part of the town in season for breakfast.

A large wharf rat ran across the Square last Friday morning. He was immediately seen by the men on the shifter, who gave hot pursuit. After a hard chase he was suddenly brought to an end by the flag stick in the hands of Maurice Sullivan, the flagman.

As a young lady on Washington street was standing on a firkin and assisting her mother to put a carpet on the clothes line in her yard last Monday morning, the firkin broke, letting her through to the ground, spoiling a pair of clocked hose and scratching her limbs.

Probably there is no garden in town that has received such universal praise from those who have visited it, as that of Mr. A. J. Hubbard on Tremont street. There are some two hundred trees or more all in full bloom, and the trees being so uniform and neatly trimmed, the effect is decidedly striking.

The W. C. T. U. still holds a prayer and conference meeting at 3 o'clock on Friday afternoons at the headquarters over Mr. A. H. Whidden's hardware store. All are welcome to these gatherings and much cheer and encouragement would be given the temperance women by reinforcements and visitors.

The present rage for the antique has developed quite a "corner" in old door knockers. People with old fashioned front doors, are having them put on for show, the bell being in use the same as ever. Country people have frequent applications to sell their door knockers, from parties riding by their premises.

Last Sunday several girls were in bathing in the little pond at the gravel pit, in the rear of Highland Park, and the amount of clothing worn was about equal to that of Mother Eve in the garden of Eden. While they were thus employed, some bad boys came along and threw stones at them, one of them being struck in the side.

One day last week, a horse car was approaching the ledge that is being blasted on Washington street. A charge was already to go off, but no attempt was made to stop the car, until a passenger present had presence of mind enough to strike the bell, and the car was stopped dangerously near the explosion, which followed almost immediately.

Mrs. Mary McNiff living on Spring street, was arrested for stealing bark from Nelson & Merrill. Bark stealing has been a decided nuisance for some time past. The operations are carried on by the women, who put their children in each direction to watch for the police, and give warning in time. Small boys four or five years of age, are also sent with baskets.

Mr. Benj. D. Hill has in his garden on Washington street, a rare curiosity in the shape of a Chinese Westeria grown as a tree, that is three inches through the trunk and on which there are about 1000 blossoms. It is quite common to see this plant as a running vine, but probably there is not another tree in this vicinity. It was photographed by Rev. Dr. Bolles of Salem, yesterday.

The Second Cadets will assemble at their armory, at half past eight o'clock on Monday morning, for their annual spring drill. The corps will pay a marching salute to the Mayor at the City Hall, and will then proceed directly to Juniper Point, where the day will be spent in drill. Dinner will be served by Mr. Davis at the pavilion. The corps will return to the city at the close of the afternoon and probably have a dress parade on the common.

The following officers of the Catholic Order of Forresters of this town have been elected: Chief ranger, Thomas F. Lyons; vice chief ranger, John J. Bartlett; recording secretary, William J. McCarty; financial secretary, James Sherry; treasurer, Patrick F. Heffernan; senior conductor, Edward Ralph; Junior conductor, John J. Cullen; inside sentinel, John B. Kelly; outside sentinel, Patrick Sweeny; court chaplain, Rev. John E. Hickey; court physician, Dr. John Shanahan.

Excelsior Steamer No. 2 have been making some decided improvements in their room at the brick engine house. The walls have been nicely tinted in two shades by Blaney, handsome new blue curtains have been furnished by Goulding, four elegant steel engravings 24x35, and representing different scenes, have been furnished by Wm. H. Crowley. These with new cast iron cuspidores and other useful furniture, make it one of the most attractive rooms in the building.

We take the following from the Union Signal. The Doctor has many friends here who will sympathize with him in his great loss: "The saddest news comes from Dr. Reynolds in his desolate Dakota home. Last Sunday evening his beautiful wife, after a painful illness, passed on to the life, 'so near and yet so far.' The funeral took place at Rockford, whither her remains were brought for burial, from the home of Ex-Mayor Wilkins. Prayers unnumbered will follow Dr. Reynolds on his homeward way. May the Spirit of all consolation possess his heart and mind in this darkest hour. We commend him and the two little motherless children to the sure mercies of Him whose tenderness is beyond that of wife or mother."

Messrs. R. Hoe & Co. of New York, the famous press manufacturers, have just written a letter to The Boston Globe that their new perfecting press will be completed in September. This will give the Globe a capacity of 50,000 papers an hour and enable the management to print and deliver 200,000 Globes in four hours, the time in which a morning and evening newspaper usually occupies in printing and delivery. The enormous increase in the circulation of the daily and Sunday Globe forced the management to order additional machinery and confirms the impression in the public mind that The Globe is making rapid strides.

A daring robbery was committed on Monday morning on the train for Boston, which leaves this station at 9.08. This is the Lawrence train and is in charge of Conductor Nason, one of the oldest conductors on the road, as far as Salem. Mr. Nason takes the collections on the Lawrence branch, on this train, to be transmitted to the treasurer's office in Boston. The money is placed in sealed envelopes and locked in the conductor's room. It is stated that it has not been the custom to lock the tin box in which the different envelopes are placed—the locking of the room itself being considered a sufficient safeguard. Mr. Nason had them secure, as he supposed, and remained standing near the door while the train went through the tunnel, after which, as is well known, he leaves the train, and the cars of the Lawrence branch are taken to Boston by the Gloucester train. As the train was nearing Lynn, the conductor discovered that an entrance had been effected to this room, and that the entire contents of the box were missing. There is no doubt, therefore, that the robbery was committed after Nason had left the cars, and it was found that the panel of the saloon which adjoins the room had been sawed and an entrance thereby forced into it. There is no doubt that the thief or thieves must have been well acquainted with the custom in reference to the collection, and must have known just where to find the money. It has been the custom from this town, we understand, to send returns daily, so that the amount lost was only the collection of one day. The officials, however, seem not inclined to state the amount missing—and it is rumored that it may be larger than at first supposed. Active measures are being taken for the discovery of the guilty parties, and we hope they may prove successful.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The boy, Patrick Comer, son of Bartholomew Comer of this town, who was recently injured by being trod on by one of Forepaugh's large elephants in Boston, died last Thursday morning in the Boston hospital. The particulars of the case as far as can be learned are these: the boy, who was sixteen years of age, ran away from home unbeknown to his parents, and the first they knew of his whereabouts was when they got news of his injuries. He was not employed by the circus company as represented, but some way or other got in to the show, and approached one of the elephants and tendered him a piece of cake, between which he placed a piece of tobacco; this angered the animal, who grasped the boy with his trunk and dashed him to the ground and trod on him, inflicting fatal injuries. Mr. Forepaugh was in town last Friday and called upon the parents of the boy and offered to pay all the expenses. We learn that Mr. Comer hag refused to accept Forepaugh's term.

Charlie Basford, conductor on the Lynn Horse railroad, was temporarily suspended during last week. A young girl named Pierce, whose father is employed in the health department in the city of Lynn, in company with others, was getting off a car on Washington street last Wednesday, when the conductor started the car, not noticing but what all were off. As the car started the girl jumped, and was thrown to the ground, but was quickly assisted to a house in the vicinity, where after a short time she recovered. Mr. Basford reported the accident, and according to the rules of the road was suspended. His reinstatement depended upon his securing the signature of the parent of the child, to the effect that she was not severely injured. This the father refused to do, but Mr. Basford secured the signature of some half dozen witnesses, that the child was not much injured, and was reinstated.

The marriage of Thomas M. Stimpson, Esq., of this town, and Miss Sarah E., daughter of James Perkins, of Magnolia, took place last Thursday evening at the residence of Henry H. Proctor. Esq. The ceremony was performed in the Episcopal form by Rev. W. G. Sperry. James N. Ham and Charles A. Haskell acted as ushers on the occasion, and the parlors of Mr. Proctor's mansion were appropriately and elegantly decorated; the flowers being furnished by J. M. Ward. Smith Bros. of Boston were the caterers, and a bountiful repast was provided for the guests. The presents were numerous and valuable, and the couple left for Boston amid the hearty good wishes of their numerous friends. After visiting Niagara and other places of interest, Mr. and Mrs. Stimpson will reside on Main street, in the house recently vacated by Dr. Geo. S. Osborne.

There is no man in the community so supremely serene as the driver of a barrel team. This was illustrated Monday, by a little incident on Main street. His team was piled high with barrels and he was comfortably seated on top, and selecting the middle of the horse car track, he looked perfectly happy. Along comes a car, the conductor jingles the bell, the driver "hollers" himself hoarse, the boys whistle, and the passengers all stand up to see what is the matter, but the driver of the barrel team sits as unconcerned as if in his own home. Finely some one runs ahead and politely remonstrates with him and he pulls off on one side and all is lovely.

As the thunder storm season is approaching, it is timely to say too much caution cannot be observed in using a telephone during the prevalence of a storm. Should the electric fluid from the atmosphere pass along the wire on which a person is talking he would be likely to receive a shock which would materially impair his hearing. The instrument itself is likely to be damaged if the electricity strikes its wire, as the great power of the current would burn out the magnet. More or less damage is always caused at the central office by electric showers, and whenever the electricity strikes a wire the switch board is covered with dancing flames. When this occurs the operators always abandon the board and remain away as long as the storm continues.

At the sale of the Winona Mills property last Thursday afternoon, the mill, water privileges, 26 acres of land and 30 acres covered by the pond were bid in by the proprietors, George C. Richardson & Co., for $3000. Rev. Willard Spaulding purchased a cottage and three fourths of an acre of land for $587; Benjamin Taylor bought three-fourths of an acre of wood-land; Mr. Southwick eleven acres of wood-land; William Clough a piece of grass land; and Thomas E. Wilson the boiler and engine, for $100. Low prices ruled. This property has been taxed for $8000.

There will be a lecture next Sunday evening at seven o'clock in the South Church by Hon. Neal Dow of Portland, Maine. We think this gentleman has not addressed an audience in this town for many years, and for that reason is likely to draw a crowded house. Of course he needs no detailed introduction. As the author of "The Maine Liquor Law" his name is known wherever the English language is spoken. Liquor sellers and drinkers have had reason to fear him. As a business man he has been successful; as Mayor of his native city he has been, as one has said, "praised by good men and cursed by those who would do evil;" as a General of Union troops during the civil war his record is well known, but as an opponent of the rum traffic his name has found entrance into most minds. He is an old man now, being past his seventy-eighth birth-day and since 1837, a period of forty-six years, which may be called a half century, he has battled unflinchingly the liquor traffic. All, those opposed as well as those in favor of his views, should hear him and all the history and workings of the law which since 1846 has been a living part of the statutory code of Maine. His late sickness admonishes us that an opportunity to listen to him will not be granted for many years more. He speaks under the auspices of the Congregational church temperance committee.

A floral testimonial of a new and handsome design, was seen at the funeral of Mrs. D. S. Littlefield, and was furnished by the company of Steamer No. 1. It consisted of a wreath two feet in diameter, with a foundation composed of rare ferns, delicate exotics and tropical foliage. On this were the choicest roses, such as Marechal Niel, Souvenir de Malmaison, Nippetos, Catharine Mermet, and others, stepparotis, bouvardia, carnations, pansies, violets, etc. Eight inches above the wreath was a crown twelve inches in diameter, composed of choice flowers, and surmounted by a cross six inches high, of Neapolitan violets, the whole forming a combination at once unique, elegant and appropriate. It was furnished by Mr. B. D. Hill, and was photographed the next day. The Board of Engineers contributed a large and handsome cross, from Ward's greenhouse. A floral star, with the word "Mother" at the base in purple immortelles on a groundwork of carnations, was placed at the head of the casket.

About 12 M. Tuesday as a drove of hogs was being disembarked from the cars, where, it is said, they had been confined over 24 hours without food or water, one little black fellow seeing a small green patch in front of him that seemed to promise those things that he had been deprived of, made a break for liberty; he was pursued by one of the drovers, who beat him with a long whip whenever he got near him, and belabored by a crowd of small boys armed with clubs of various sizes, some of which, had he been struck in the right place, would have ended poor piggy's career, but at last he was captured, and his inhuman treatment came to an end by his being driven off to his destination. Where are the agents of the society with the long name?

The water board have decided to make extensions of the water pipes about town as follows, most of them being four and six inch: On Crowninshield street, 300 feet; on Berry street, 300 feet; connect Jacobs and Stevens streets, Bowditch Court, 600 feet; Liberty street from the pump to Gardner's Lane, Holly street from Tremont to Northend street some 1650 feet. A 2 inch galvanized pipe has been laid down Goldthwait's and Parson's Courts; Trask's lane 1 1-2 inch pipe and on Poor's Court off Tremont street a 1 inch pipe. The board have under consideration the extension of the pipe on Lynn and Lynnfield streets.

Mr. John L. Dupont, employed by D. A. & F. H. Caskin, has invented a very ingenious machine for the destruction of potato bugs and other vegetable insects. It consists of a large tin can, in which is placed five or ten gallons of water; a float filled with small holes containing Paris Green is placed in the can and the motion of the body causes the poison to mix with the water. On the outside are two tin spouts, on the ends of which are two strainers, similar to those on a watering pot; the can is carried on the back, which makes it very convenient for a man to carry.

The shooting gallery in Blaney's block on Foster-street, is attracting considerable attention by some of our local marksmen and some very nice shooting has been done by some of them. The following is the score of a few of the best shots out of a possible 78, through a one-inch bull's eye. The proprietor, Michael Keefe, made 76, Charles Enos 73, Henry C. Wilson 71, Jerry Rooke 70, Charlie Kanzig 72.

Mr. John F. Pickering while cutting tobacco with a small sized tobacco cutter accidentally cut the end of his thumb off, making a painful, although not a serious injury.

So. Peabody.—Mr. Theodore P. Murray met with a very severe accident last week, while painting his store. The ladder slipped, throwing him to the ground, striking on his face and shoulder, cutting his face severely and spraining his left shoulder

Mr. Henry Barker, who has been sick for two weeks past, died last Friday and was buried at Boxford Monday last.

John Law of Lynnfield lost a valuable horse last week, by its breaking its leg.

A missionary concert was held at the vestry last Sunday evening, and some very interesting pieces were read by members of the society.

The new pastor of the Congregational Church in Lynnfield was installed last Wednesday afternoon, the sermon being preached by Rev. Dr. Plumb. Rev. J. W. Colwell and Rev. W. G. Sperry of this town, took part in the services, Rev. Mr. Sperry giving the right hand of fellowship.

700 local passengers were carried Sunday.

Mr. Moses Kimball has removed to his farm in North Reading.

Our quiet neighborhood was somewhat startled by the appearance of crape on the Rand boys door. The neighbors on visiting the scene found Mr. Jacob Rand quite seriously hurt. Drs. Pike and Weston were immediately called, who thought best to remove him to the Alms House for treatment, but as the boys objected, the neighbors furnished them a bed and other necessaries and made them as comfortable as they could. The facts are these. Jacob was walking up Tremont street Wednesday night; just after passing Corbett's he was set upon by three men, who attempted to rob him, in which they did not succeed, but they pounded and kicked him seriously in the abdomen. At the present writing he is doing finely. Z.

Patrick Keegan and another party from Salem, while intoxicated on Sunday, seemed anxious to have a fight with somebody. They finally decided to have it out among themselves, and went for each other with a vim in the rear of the Washington House. It is alleged by those who were standing near that one of them had a jack-knife in his hand. At this juncture friends of the parties arrived on the scene of action and brought it to a speedy close.

The Strawberry Festival at the Universalist Vestry last Thursday evening, proved an attraction to many of our people, and a good social time was had as well as considerable quantity of strawberries and ice cream disposed of. A minuet was danced and there was some singing by the members of the Sabbath School, a song by Mr. Taggard, and a violin solo by Hazen Quint. About $35.00 was realized.

An excited citizen was heard to exclaim to-day — We don our duster hoist our sun umbrella, mop our perspiring brow, and in one gleeful overture welcome this genuine summer day. Welcome heat, welcome the ice-man, welcome the cooling drinks, welcome the large parasol with room enough for two in the shade, welcome, welcome.

The county commissioners are asked to widen Aborn street, in this town between the residence of the late William Sutton and the corner of Aborn and Sutton streets. Pursuant to which they will meet at Sutton's Wool shop, Monday, July 9th.

Mr. William Plumer, of California, a half brother of the late Hiram Plumer, was in town Monday. He has not been in Peabody for 32 years, and his relatives here were much surprised to see him, not knowing if he were alive.

OF ANOTHER AGE.

Gradually Supplanted by a Better Article Certain Old Things are Done Away.

In the general reception room of the Western Union Telegraph building on Broadway, New York, are exhibited the coarse, crude and clumsy instruments of the infancy of the telegraph. They are only relics now. More perfect machinery has superceded them.

Years ago what is now styled the old-fashioned porous plaster did some good service. There was then nothing better of the kind. Now all that is changed. Science and study have gone deeper into the secrets of medicine and produced BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER, which embodies all the excellencies thus far possible in an external remedy. The old plasters were slow—the Capcine is rapid; they were uncertain—the Capcine is sure. Cheaper articles bear similar names. Be careful, therefore, that some thrifty druggist does not deceive you. In the centre of the genuine is cut the word CAPCINE. Price 25 cents.

Seabury and Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Miscellaneous.

A Sunday Sermon.

Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. Proverbs 22 and 10.

Her price is far above rubies. She is virtuous; and this means more, far more than mere personal chastity, and it means that too. A virtuous woman never soils her mouth with foul stories or smutty jokes. She holds herself aloof from all filthiness, her words are pure and her soul is chaste as her body. A virtuous woman holds no mean suspicions of other women. She does not hold up her hands in holy horror because she sees something she does not quite understand. A virtuous woman gives every man and woman the benefit of a doubt. Knowing herself pure she believes nothing but good till the evil be proven. A virtuous woman is as unsuspicious as a babe. She is not finding insults in every man's words. If a man does her a kindness or pays her a compliment she is not looking for some evil behind the courtesy. If a man does the same by some lady friend she does not suspect it to be or have been paid for in those favors that are legal tender the world over. A virtuous woman believes in virtue, in honor, in truth, in fidelity. And she who does not believe in the possibilities of human purity is only chaste because she is so unattractive that no one has cared to wish her otherwise. Thousands of women who believe themselves paragons of womanly purity, who hurl stones at the unfortunate, who suspect all women of infamy, are only virtuous because their virtue has never been assailed. Incapable of affection, or passion, cold, cruel, hard and heartless, they are invulnerable where many a better woman falls; but this is not virtue nor do men recognize it as such. It is a nondescript quality that neither men admire nor women emulate. Don't call yourself a virtuous woman simply because you have never violated the seventh commandment. If your heart holds unclean thoughts, or base suspicion, or if you coin lies to hurt some other woman, or retail unpleasant truths, you are not virtuous, you have no virtue in you. Impure thoughts and bad impressions poison the soul worse than bad actions, that are often only hindered by the speech of people. If you are only virtuous lest somebody should know you otherwise, you are not virtuous at all.—Harrisburg Capital

THE SUDDEN death of Arbuckle, the great cornetist, carries the mind back to the days of his musical triumphs in connection with Gilmore's famous band and to the great Peace Jubilee. The appearance of Gilmore's band without Arbuckle was a serious calamity. His name was next only to Ole Bull among the soloists at the great jubilee. He had been heard and admired in every city where Gilmore appeared, and when he left Boston for New York, Arbuckle co-operated with him in many of his enterprises. Lately, however, he had been band master of the ninth regiment band, and this band had been engaged by Manager Thayer for the coming season at the Point of Pines. He was born in Scotland, and was only 54 years of age. His death ensued from pneumonia.

Wilkie Collins' last story is called "My Lady's Money." In this country it would have been: "Mother-in-Law has got the Stamps," or "The Old Woman is Well Heeled," remarks a paragrapher. All Americans do not employ such outrageous slang phrases as the above. In speaking of Ely's Cream Balm, however, they do say: "it's perfect," "it's as fragrant as flowers, and certain death to catarrh," &c., &c. This Balm is not a liquid or snuff, and is easily applied. Thousands of grateful persons attest its efficacy. "One in our family had catarrh for 8 years," said R. W. Merrill, Sec'y Phœnix Manuf'g Co., Grand Rapids, Mich. "She ineffectually tried other remedies and several specialty doctors in Boston. Ely's Cream Balm has restored her health and hearing; which were considered incurable." Try it, reader. Price, 50 cents.

The illuminated clock upon the tower of the Boston depot of the Eastern Railroad will be appreciated by passengers coming down Friend street under the suspicion that they may be "too late for the train."

A persistent effort is making to remove Dr. Loring as Commissioner of Agriculture. If it succeeds, life will be a desert waste to the handsome Doctor; but then, he'd get rid of those troublesome calluses—which would be worth something.—Milford Journal.

FOR THE HAPPINESS OF HOME.

From a Clergyman's Home Comes a Message Containing the Wisdom of Experience.

Home is the centre of the social system. From it proceed the best and purest influences felt in the world, and towards it gravitate the tenderest hopes of humanity. For it all good men labor while their working days last, and around it their last thoughts linger lovingly when those days are done.

Yet home does not usually approach in practice its own ideals. The mother is overtaxed with household duties and the rearing and training of her children, while the father fights the outside battle to win the wherewithal to meet expenses. Sooner or later care and toil leave their marks. It is true enough, as Kingsley sings in the "Three Fishers," that but too much working and weeping brush all the bloom from life's fruit.

Mental anxiety and lack of rest and pleasure induce physical diseases of many kinds; whence the need of a trustworthy tonic to give help and strength in times of need. Among the good women of the land who have found such a sure anchor is Mrs. A. C. George, wife of Rev. A. C. George, D. D., pastor of the Centenary M. E. Church, of Chicago, whose words we have her permission to quote:

"I use PARKER'S GINGER TONIC in my family, and can say that we are highly pleased with it as a tonic. From my experience of its value, I recommend it as a reliable family medicine."

Please note: first, PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not a mere essence of Ginger; second, it contains nothing to create an appetite for intoxicating drinks; third, it is a splendid health restorative for all who suffer from disordered Liver or Kidneys or any disease arising from indigestion and impure blood. Accept no substitute for it. Prices, 50c. and $1 per bottle. It is cheaper to buy the larger size. HISCOX & Co., New York.

Book Notices.

The June number of Ballou's Magazine contains a liberal installment of that intensely interesting story, "The Belle of Australia," by William H. Thomes. The story is growing in interest, if possible. Besides "The Belle," there are many notable stories, engravings, and poems. Send ten cents for a specimen copy, and see how good Ballou's really is. It is only $1.50 per annum, postpaid. Address Thomes & Talbot, 23 Hawley street, Boston. For sale at all the periodical depots at fifteen cents a copy.

The WOMAN AT WORK for May contains an excellent sketch of "The Cary Sisters,"—with portrait of Alice—by E. Addie Heath. The friendship of the poet Whittier for these sister poets is very touchingly described. Mrs. May Wright Sewall in "Women in Indiana Industries," enforces the worth of woman's work to the state, and also that housekeeping is a business—a profession worthy of the best woman's ambition. The first chapters of a new serial, "What Shall We Do for Her?" by Emma Mortimer White, promises a true exposition of the teacher's work. "The Fireside" is practical in suggestions and varied in subjects pertaining to the home, while "Our World," the "Club," and the editor's "Outlook," discuss some important questions in a pleasant and attractive style. $1.00 a year; 10 cents a copy; Woman at Work, Brattleboro, Vt.

There is a lavish amount of entertaining reading in Lippincott's Magazine for June. In "Vagaries of Western Architecture," Frederic G. Mather takes up the history of a representative Western city, "Joinwater," and traces its growth and social changes during the ten decades of its existence, as exemplified in the successive styles of building adopted by its citizens, from the log hut of the first settlers to the "Newport Villa" of the present day. "The London Season" is capitally described by Norman Pearson, who, among other sketches, gives us one of a class of young men closely resembling our own "Dudes" but known in English society as "Mashers." "A Night with Remenyi," by L. J. S., will be found especially delightful by all who have ever listened to the playing of the great Hungarian violinist, whose passionate devotion to his art and genial eccentricities in private life are vividly depicted in this sketch. "Animals Extinct Within Human Memory," by C. F. Holder, is an interesting paper of a popular scientific character, and Mrs. Margaret J. Preston's account of the American sculptor Ezekiel, whose portrait bust of Lizst is now on exhibition in New York, is timely and appreciative. There is no need to call attention to "The Jewel in the Lotos," of which a long instalment is given in this number, and which maintains its interest and charm without abatement. The poetry, "Monthly gossip," and book reviews are of the usual excellence.

REDUCTION OF FARES.—The managers of the Old Colony railroad on May 15 issued a new passenger tariff, making a large reduction in rates of fare. They have done this believing it is the true policy to increase the already large passenger traffic of the road, besides serving the interests of its patrons. In addition to the reduction made, there will be a reduction from nearly all stations to Oak Bluffs and Nantucket, which will be in effect on or before the summer time-table commences, about June 18.

A country girl wrote to her lover:—"Now, George, don't you fale to be at the singing school to-night." George wrote back that in the bright lexicon of youth (Webster's Unabridged) there's no such word as "fale."

Miss Georgia Cayvan is always accompanied on her travels and in the theatre by an older sister. Lotta's mother is her inseparable companion, and Mary Anderson's mamma, Mrs Griffin, is ever at her side.

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is

HEYLINGBERG'S

EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg, Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,
FRANK A. BRAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired. Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

A YOUNG OLD LADY.

"Yes, Sir! I'm Younger than any of my Children now," said Mrs. Sarah M. Robinson, of 61 William St., New Haven, Conn.—We Read about this kind of Noble Ladies, but Seldom See them in Society.

"Yes, Sir; I'm younger than any of my children now. I keep up with the times, I read the papers, applaud the victories of old Yale, and don't grow old," were the words of Mrs. Robinson to your reporter when he called at her home. Mrs. Robinson is one of the earnest, go ahead sort of aged ladies, of whom you read, but whom you so rarely find in modern society. "I've had my share of trouble," she said, "for all my life I've been a sufferer from erysipelas. From this has resulted diseased stomach and inaction of the digestive organs. I've been troubled with dyspepsia, and have had such a weakness of the stomach it has seemed as if I needed something artificial and strengthening. I attribute this to erysipelas, which is constitutional with me. I've been under the physicians's care a great deal during my life, but I never received any permanent benefit I think until I began taking Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, which has proved a perfect restorative in my case. My health is better now than it has been for a long time. I consider Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY an excellent medicine. It is used extensively in this city. I keep it as a family medicine, and rely upon it for I know of the good results of using it."

Your reporter left Mrs. Robinson rejoicing in health and renewed youth, and bestowing merited praise on that which is the source of happiness to thousands, viz: Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. Ask your druggist for it. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY has become a household word. Everybody, sooner or later, gets sick, and sickness is both wearisome and costly. FAVORITE REMEDY steps in at this point. It is not expensive and it is efficient. For all diseases of the Blood, Bilious Disorders, Kidney complaints, Constipation, and the aches and ills which make the domestic life of women a cross so hard to bear.

Is the time made by Morse Yellow Dock Nov. 3d, 1882, at Narragansett Park, being the fastest record ever made by any trotting horse in a public race. She is owned by the Morse Yellow Dock Syrup Co., of Providence, R. I., and is an advertising medium for their renowned Remedy for the cure of Kidney and Blood diseases and Dyspepsia. The owners of this young mare have refused a cash offer of Forty Thousand Dollars for her, and anticipate (with a little more age) showing, simply as an advertisement, the fastest trotter the world ever saw.

Miscellaneous.

To the tourist, business traveller and the general public the New York & New England Railroad Company presents unusual facilities for travel this season. The starting point proper for passengers of this road is at the foot of Summer street, Boston, but the casual visitor to the small and unpretentious building now used as the station has little idea of what lies beyond, on the space once known as South Boston flats, but which now has the more dignified designation of the "New York & New England Docks." Here within the last few years has been erected an enormous elevator, with a capacity for holding 500,000 bushels of grain, two large warehouses, several freight-houses, coal sheds and other necessary buildings, so as to meet the rapidly increasing freight traffic over the road. This growth is the result not merely of natural advantages, but of the foresight, as well as pluck and determination of the New York & New England managers. Their plans for the development of through business have surmounted seeming impossibilities, and the policy of rapid transit, low fares and free ticket system has built up a large and profitable local travel. Allusion was made in the first part of this notice to the fact that unusual facilities were now offered tourists and others in travelling by this road; and in this connection it may be stated that excursion tickets are on sale at New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington and Southern cities to all points in the White Mountains, Rangely and Moosehead Lakes, Mount Desert, and all the chief coast resorts of New Hampshire and Maine. Tickets can also be obtained in Boston and all stations on the line of the road; also to the Catskill Mountains, Saratoga, Oak Bluffs and Nantucket. Through trains with Pullman cars attached are run between Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and Boston, around New York city, by the well known transfer steamer "Maryland" without a single change. The Norwich line, leaving Pier 40, North River, New York, daily, has the magnificent new steamer City of Worcester—pronounced the finest in the world, running alternate days with the favorite steamer City of Boston, to New London. Elegant chair cars are run on the train in connection with these steamers. Pullman cars, too, are run on all trains between Boston and Hartford, Waterbury, Danbury, and Hudson River. This line is convenient for travellers desiring to visit points on the Hudson river, Catskill Mountains and Saratoga, as it connects at Newburgh with the Albany day line of steamers and the West Shore Railroad, and at Fishkill with the Hudson River Railroad. All trains leaving Philadelphia and the South in the afternoon are due in Boston the following morning, in season to make connections on the Boston and Lowell, Eastern and Boston & Maine Railroads. A very desirable route for tourists who have plenty of time on their hands between Boston and New York is via Brewster's & New York City and Northern Railroad, the beauty of the scenery being unsurpassed.

POLITE USE OF THE HAT.—When a Frenchman enters a store or restaurant he always raises his hat. It is his polite way of acknowledging the humanity of those in charge. Another use of his hat is exhibited by the following extract from the Paris correspondence of the Kansas City Journal:

"But the Frenchman makes a continual and very graceful use of his chapeau. Not only to ladies, but also to elders and masculine friends, the hat is raised both at meeting and parting.

The stranger wending his way along the street at the beginning of his stay is surprised to see all the passers—boys and men. hod-carriers and senators—raise their hats; a funeral procession is passing.

Very soon the stranger learns to follow the custom. I heartily wish that a practice so pleasing and unobtrusive, and so different from the heartless staring that too often meets a funeral procession at home, might be introduced among us."

Parents and teachers would do well to encourage, both by precept and example, these polite and very agreeable attentions. Graceful and instructive courtesies are the result of early training.

Dressmakers and families who do their own dressmaking will receive great assistance by taking the Young Ladies' Journal, a London publication, supplied in this country by the International News Company of New York. More and later fashions are furnished in one number of this magazine than there are in several numbers of ordinary fashion magazines. Besides the fashions there is instruction in all kinds of embroidery, etc. The book also contains very interesting original stories, selections, poetry, music, &c. Buy the June number which is for sale at the Peabody News' Company's, and you will not be disappointed but will order it sent regularly.

THE

PATENTED JULY 16, 1878.

With this device Windows are balanced without the use of weights and cords, and therefore no long boxes on each side of the sash are required. The adjustment to each window according to the weight of its sash and glass by tightening or loosening of its spring is very simple. It is always easy of access to take out for any desirable adjustment, and is applicable to

ANY KIND OF WINDOWS, WHETHER NEW OR OLD STYLE,

Assisting in the opening and holding them at any point to which the lower sash may be raised, or the upper lowered, for the purpose of ventilation and comfort. The general testimony of those whose houses have been supplied with these fixtures for three years is that they are a great convenience, and SATISFACTION IS WARRANTED.

A Letter from the Far West.

NO. III.

Polities are just as ardent in Montana as in Massachusetts. We read the news of Gen. Butler's election, 3000 miles from Boston, on the following morning. Even his lengthy inaugural we read in the Boston papers eight days after its delivery, or rather attempted to read it. It is almost a wonder that such an enormous charge didn't "bust" the gun that fired it. But it had been a long time loading and we feared it might prove, like old Queen Ann's muskets, and kill at both ends. I landed in Helena on the eve of the territorial election. My first visit was to the largest hall in the city, where I listened for a few minutes to a calm presentation of the gospel according to the Democratic party, by the editor of one of our local dailies. I was informed that the Republican rally was in the Opera House. I wended my way to what seemed to me a retired street or alley, and thought I had made a mistake, but on going up a broad stair way I opened the doors of a hall and suddenly found myself in the midst of what then seemed an enchanting scene compared with the dark and unfavorable entrance. The hall was brilliantly illuminated with electric lights and densely packed with a fine looking audience thickly interspersed with ladies in costly robes, so characteristic of this place. A profusion of flowers ornamented the stage and an invalid chair was rolled down to the foot lights amid a perfect storm of applause. The chair contained the Republican nominee for delegate to the national congress, A. C. Botkin, the U. S. Marshal for Montana, a paralytic in his lower limbs, whose home is in Helena and who is evidently a popular candidate for the highest elective office in the territory. His style of address was very deliberative, his language choice and classical. His argument, however, dwelt largely with personalities. Why is it that politicians so commonly play the dilettante in mere personalities, instead of rising to the broad level of the great principles which furnish the foundation and frame work of political science? The Hon. Martin Maginis was returned to Congress for the third time, but Mr. Botkin made a good record and it is alleged by many of his party that were it not for fraudulent returns, his wheeled chair would even now be in the Representative Chamber at Washington, where it quite likely it will be the next term, if he is spared. The politics of Montana are evidently changing hands. The Council Chamber is evenly divided, which caused a dead-lock of nearly a month before they could elect a president and effect a permanent organization, neither party giving way until at length a compromise was made. The house has a Democratic majority. When the change comes, of course things will be a great deal better, else the Republicans will be greater sinners than the Democrats, because they will sin under greater light.

Society in Montana outside of ten or a dozen of the larger places, I suppose is in the nascent state. In Helena the society of the elite is quite select. This is largely due, I suspect, to the presence of a large number of the relatives of Washington magnates, who occupy many government positions in this city. Every administration at Washington, since Montana became a territory, has had relatives here. A cousin of President Garfield, Hon. Wm. Ballou, is the U. S. Land Agent here, a good christian man, a member of the Disciple Church, but as that denomination has no church in Helena at present, the members of that faith usually worship with the Baptists. President Arthur has, or had, a brother here who was paymaster in the U. S. Army. Unless I am misinformed, his presence has been no great honor to the place nor to his distinguished brother. Secretary Blaine has a sister here whose family is connected with one of the Helena papers and who are prominent members of the Catholic church. Gen. Sherman's only son, the young priest, was here for a time. Senator Harrison's son is U. S. Assayer in this place. These with many others too numerous to mention, together with the great wealth of the town, makes Helena society decidedly tony. For style I have never seen anything that exceeds this place. It has every convenience and luxury of any large city in the East, save steam and horse railroads. The former are within one hundred miles on each side of us and both the Northern Pacific and Union Pacific Railroads are to be here in July. The latter (the horse cars) will be here sometime.

The city has a fair Public Library. The ladies of the place recently held their first annual art exhibition, the proceeds of which are for the nucleus of an art gallery. The exhibition would have done credit to a town twice a dozen years old. Governor Crosby, recently United States Consul at Florence, contributed the largest and finest lot of etchings and engravings of Italian scenery, I have ever seen.

As a commercial and business centre, Helena has a proud record. This is evinced by its Post Office business last year, which, including the money order department, footed up over two-thirds of $1,000,000. There are about fifty residents whose annual income ranges from $20,000 to $100,000. Their property has all been acquired in the last dozen or fifteen years at the farthest.

The place has four banks, two of which are government depositories. One has a capital stock of $100,000 and an additional surplus of $300,000 and holds besides this, $200,000 more in government bonds. Another has a paid in capital stock of $250,000 and has purchased $100,000 in government bonds as a United States depository. The expectations are that when the town becomes a railroad center she will out do all her previous record. Building lots on the principal business street have recently been sold for $400 and $500 a front foot, and large stone and brick stores and ware houses are going up in expectancy of the coming "boom." This, together with many new and expensive private residences, is fast changing Helena from the rough mining camp of fifteen or eighteen years ago.

There was deposited in the Helena Assay office last year, $91,013.16 in silver bullion and $678,925.33 in gold bullion, being an increase of $108,388.70 over the previous year, in gold. The increase this year will be much greater. New mines are being constantly discovered and old mines which will not pay under a 40 per cent. yield away from railroad facilities, pay well at a 10 and 12 per cent. yield when near a railroad. Helena herself has been mined over three times and much of the town is built on the tailings of the mines which Chinaman are working over the fourth time at payin g wages, notwithstanding we are a hundred miles from a railway.

Thomas Cruse, an illiterate Irishman, after years of prospecting amid most straightened circumstances, has recently discovered at Marysville, twenty miles from Helena, what is believed by some to be the richest gold lode in the United States. It is known in the stock markets of Europe and the United States as the celebrated "Drum Summon Mine" and was sold last month to an English syndicate for $1,500,000, Mr. Cruse keeping a good share of the stock. This is a sample of many cases though few prospectors ever "strike it rich" like Mr. Cruse. Twenty-two location notices have been filed in the Recorder's office of the city of Butte, during the last month, and quite a number of the prospectors have already found purchasers with the expectation that they have found future bonanzas. Mining is much like gambling. Once a little successful and it henceforth has a strange fascination for a man until he goes wild and not unfrequently crazy. Hence Montana, like all mining regions, has many forlorn hopes and lunatics. I have been authentically informed that not one miner in twenty ever meets his expectations; some say not in a hundred. I am sure that I have met more men who have lost fortunes in mining then have found them, and it is my impression that there is more money put into the ground, in the business, than is taken out.

L. L. WOOD.

PENALTY FOR SIN.—May 31, Edward Roach of Lynn, drunkenness, $5.85. Sent to Salem Jail.

James Murphy, Lowell, drunkenness, $5.85.

John Tucker, second drunk, sent for two months to the house of correction.

June 2, Mary A. McNiff, larceny of bark, fined $9.85.

June 4, Henry Bowers, drunkenness, $5.85. Sent to Alms House.

The gross earnings of the Eastern Railroad for the month of April, 1883, were $267,615.58; in 1882, $258,834.92, gain, $8,780.66.

Dramatic and Musical.

"The Tourists in a Pullman Palace Car" are likely to be very pleasant people to meet this year. Mr. W. A. Mestayer is extremely popular here, and he has engaged, for this season of a week at the Park, those great favorites Mr. and Mrs. George S. Knight, J. N. Long, Therese Vaughn, Will H. Bray and other well-known people. The piece is spoken of as brighter than ever.

In response to numerous requests by patrons of the Bijou Theatre, the management have decided to revive "Iolanthe" for this week only with a great cast. The title role will be taken by Miss Sylvia Gerrish, who has already appeared with success in the part. Next week Gilbert and Sullivan's Sorcerer will be heard here. Mr. Harry Dixey is to be the John Wellington Wells, Signor Brocolini will appear as Sir Marmaduke, Mr. Alexis will be Mr. Fessenden, while Mr. Digby V. Bell, an old favorite here and a very effective singer, is to be heard as Dr. Daly, the part of the Counsel being assigned to Mr. George A. Schiller. The role of Lady Sangazure is to find an interpreter in Miss Augusta Roche. Miss Janet Edmondson will appear as Aline, Miss Sylvia Gerrish as Conscience, and Miss Lizzie Burton will be the Dame Partlet. This is a cast assuredly that "needs no bush." A chorus of thirty voices has been engaged. No gas is used in the Bijou—and it is the coolest theatre in Boston.

The Boston Theatre has closed its doors for the regular season. Next week it will be re-opened for a summer season.

The new advertisement of Wilmot's Clothing House in Salem, announces that "he who hesitates is lost"—and if that means loss of all the good bargains in store for their patrons, we should judge it to be true by the prices which are made on their goods. Read their advertisement and be convineed.

Poet's Corner.

The Difference.

Two babes were born in the self-same town,
On the very same bright day;
They laughed and cried in their mother's arms,
In the very self-same way;
And both were as pure and innocent
As falling flakes of snow;
But one of them lived in the terraced house,
And one in the street below.

Two children played in the self-same town,
And both were bright and fair;
But one had her curls brushed smooth and round,
The other had tangled hair.
Both of the children grew apace,
As all our children grow,
But one of them lived in the terraced house,
And one in the street below.

Two maidens wrought in the self-same town,
And one was wedded and loved;
The other saw through the curtain's part
The world where her sister moved;
And one was smiling a happy bride,
The other knew care and woe;
For one of them lived in the terraced house,
And one in the street below.

Two women lay dead in the self-same town,
And one had tender care;
The other was left to die alone
On her pallet so thin and bare.
And one had many to mourn her loss,—
For the other few tears would flow;
For one of them lived in the terraced house,
And one in the street below.

If Jesus, who died for rich and poor,
In wonderful, holy love,
Took both of the sisters in his arms
And carried them up above—
Then all the difference vanished at last,
For in heaven none would know
Which of them lived in the terraced house,
And which in the street below.

The Song of the Chimney.

Over the chimney the night wind sang,
And the chanted melody no one knew;
And the woman stopped as her babe she tossed,
And thought of the one she had long since lost,
And said, as her teardrops back she forced—
"I hate the wind in the chimney."

Over the chimney the night wind sang,
And chanted a melody no one knew;
And the children said, as they closer drew,
"'Tis some witch that is cleaving the black night through—
'Tis a fairy that just then blew,
And we hear the wind in the chimney."

Over the chimney the night wind sang,
And chanted a melody no one knew;
And the man, as he sat on the hearth below,
Said to himself: "It will surely snow,
And fuel is dearer, and wages low—
And I'll stop the leak in the chimney."

Over the chimney the night wind sang,
And chanted a melody no one knew;
But the poet listened and smiled, for he
Was man, woman and child—all three.
And he said, "It is God's own harmony,
The wind that sings in the chimney."

Selected Story.

Johnnie Green, the Drummer Boy.

A Bit of Red Tape During the War.

Washington a camp—a city under military rule—how different from our bright, breezy, beautiful capital. A few landmarks still remain—they pulled down one of the old confiscated Corcoran buildings used for a time as McClellan's headquarters, only last summer. Yet, there are traces of those years of civil strife never to be forgotten, till this generation has followed

"That innumerable caravan that moves]
To that mysterious realm where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death."

Just below the 7th St. depot, opposite the new Museum, was Armory Square Hospital, where, after every battle on the "sacred soil of Virginia,"— (and it is sacred now, reconsecrated in the precious blood of our martyrs)—hundreds of our poor fellows were brought; some to slowly return to this world, on the boundary of which they were silently hovering, the mere wrecks of strong, vigorous manhood, and others to linger awhile, and then pass out forever into the infinite peace and rest of heaven. Among the patients thus stranded in the capital was a little drummer boy—a mere child in years—who ought to have been at his books in school rather than exposed to the terrible chances and dangers of a civil war. He was shot through the lungs, but youth was in his favor. For days little Johnnie Green hovered in the debatable land between life and death; but life allied with youth conquered. Slowly he fought his way back to health, gaining, oh, so slowly.

'My patients are never buried till they die,' said the surgeon in charge, one bright morning, as he looked critically into the poor child's case. 'Johnnie, my boy, you will live to fight again!'

Johnnie smiled faintly, but the magnetic courage of the bright-spirited physician had its weight. Remember this, oh, ye who minister in the name of science by beds of pain, sunshine and a hopeful spirit are as potent agents, oftentimes, as your pills and powders. Johnnie only smiled, but he took a fresh hold on life from that day.

But strength came back in that crowded hospital so slowly, and often the poor child cried himself to sleep for mere weakness, and the futile wish to get away from all these sights and sounds of misery and suffering, and get back home, where the whispering pine boughs were never stirred by thunders of war's artillery.

It was early in June when Johnnie was recorded on the surgeon's hospital book as No. 759, and it was late in September, before he was able to creep about the grounds and sit under the trees in the flickering sunshine. Discharged for 'disability,' the boy applied for his descriptive papers at 'the medical headquarters' but no papers were to be found, and the army being on the move the prospect of the papers ever forthcoming was certainly dubious. Day after day the boy applied at 'headquarters' receiving always the same answer—'The papers have not come.' If he asked any favor, or preferred any request—the crusty officer, 'dressed in a little brief authority' carelessly answered—'I can't do anything for you till those papers come.'

His pay cut off, the mere pittance he earned by holding horses, or doing errands, hardly provided him with the coarsest food, and poorest shelter. His clothing from chronic shabbiness, soon became thoroughly ragged, his shoes were so open to the ground, so torn and worn, that they hurt worse than none, and he discarded them, while his military cap was so unmilitary in color and form, that no regiment but a ragmuffin's would ever recognize it.

In this situation, a kindly meaning person, but ignorant of the whole facts of the case, suggested to the poor child, he should apply to the Secretary of War for relief. The brave little fellow forthwith repaired to the War Department, a humble building—for the great architectural palace of the State, War and Navy Departments, was unthought of then. The little, insignificant room, on the second floor, perhaps 15x20, in size, marked 'No. 19 West Point Academy,' was the office of the Secretary of War of the United States, when that officer had a war of the first magnitude on his hands. There was a lounge or two within, and a few chairs, and a big, tall, old-fashioned office desk, on duty at the rear of the room opposite the entrance—that was all the furniture—we were 'plain folks' in those days, the chivalry and the shams were over the river in open rebellion!

At 10 A. M., the room was thrown open; at 11 the Secretary punctually made his appearance. There was no delay. The Secretary was the soul of punctuality, himself, and expected the same of his clerks. A crowd was always in waiting about the door before 10. Soldiers coming with messages not to be trusted to mail or telegraph, soldiers waiting for orders—mothers, wives and sisters, begging for information concerning some dear one, whose fate will remain forever a mystery. Senators and Representatives, important and fussy, importuning for promotions, or appointments—a crowd of eager, anxious, busy people.

Small chance had the ragged, barefoot boy to see him, on whose shoulders rested the responsibility of the national army. He tried again and again but failed.

'Go to the Secretary's house,' said the well-meaning advisor.

And to the Secretary's house went Johnnie, with a bravery born of desperation. He climbed the steps and rang the bell, shivering in the cool, sunshiny air. The well fed and clothed colored man who opened the door, at first thought it was only a beggar, and refused to admit the boy, or even to carry a message to the Secretary, for Washington, like Naples, was distinguished for its professional beggars, and it needed a critical eye to distinguish between real and simulated want. Perhaps the servant's sympathies were with the boy, and the faded blue rags might have touched a kindly chord; and he said:

'If you wish to see the Secretary, go to the War Department.'

'There's nobody there that will listen to me,' said Johnnie, sadly.

A door opened and shut within; a quick, firm step came through the hall, a pale, spectacled, nervous face appeared in the doorway, and the servant stepped aside, while the Secretary's carriage drove up to the door, punctual to the minute.

But the Secretary saw the ragged, faded blue; he saw the red thin hand go up to the tattered cap in a prompt, military salute; he saw the brave determination in the great, bright eyes, the thin, hollow-cheeks, the mouth with its lines of mingled sternness and sweetness—there was true hero's stuff under the rags, and the Secretary saw and recognized it!

Another carriage drove up, and its occupant, seeing the Secretary standing on the steps, conversing with a ragged boy, considered his claim to the Secretary's attention far more important. Senator Sherman alighted, and joined the group, his tall figure showing to advantage like a forest pine beside an oak or maple. But John Sherman, U. S. Senator, from Ohio, sank into insignificance beside John Green, U. S. drummer-boy,—in the eyes of the Secretary! The Ohio idea had not yet developed, nor had we sworn fealty to the United States of Ohio.

The great Ohio Statesman would have cut the interview short, in his curt, incisive way; but he reckoned without his host.

'No, Mr. Senator,' said the secretary, hastily. 'I can't attend to you now, sir, I really haven't the time. Look at that child, ragged and penniless, discharged from the army for 'disability,' and he says he can't get his pay,—can't get transportation,—can't get home,—because,—he can't get his papers. But I'll see to that. He shall have his money and be sent home!' and the secretary stepped quickly to his carriage. 'Drive slowly, Daniel,' he said to his coachman, 'and you, my poor child, follow the carriage to the War Department.'

With a hasty nod to the Ohio Senator, the Secretary jumped into his carriage, and was driven away, leaving Mr. Sherman to follow or not, as he pleased; while Johnnie, 'his heart like a piston-rod thumping,' his great eyes shining through a happy mist, easily kept up with Daniel's horses, and met the Secretary at the door of the War Department happier than he had been since that terrible day when he fell wounded and bleeding in the last charge of his regiment.

Beckoning the boy to follow him, the secretary threw open the door of the first room he came to, and seated himself at a vacant desk. Nervously pulling a sheet of paper towards him, he seized it, and, stabbing the inkstand with a well used pen, as if it was a bayonet, he wrote an order not to be disobeyed.

Adjust the bearer, John Green's account on the pay-rolls, and pay it immediately.

E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War.

Terse and significant were the orders the War Secretary issued. With no extra words no extra details. At the 'medicinal headquarters' they knew the Secretary's hand, and they knew John Green—unfortunately he had been there so often, that the clerks were getting tired of him. Some thought him a crank; others called him a nuisance. But John Green, with that sheet of paper and two lines of the nervous, peculiar handwriting, and the cabalistic signature, must be attended to, most certainly.

'There, my boy,' said the Secretary, rising and clasping the poor thin hand in his own firm nervous grasp. 'Give my regards to your mother, and to all good mothers in your neighborhood who have sent their sons to the front. Good-by, and God bless you!'

Another moment and the Secretary had passed out, and entered his own office, the same curt, enigmatical, clear-headed man whose character, a puzzle to his own generation, is but dimly understood to-day.

Johnnie Green stunned and bewildered for the moment, by his great happiness, coming to himself, rushed into the hall, determined to lose no time. Clutching his precious paper, he left the room just as a file of soldiers, bearing a flag torn and rent by shot and shell,—the seven-starred flag of the slaveholders' oligarchy—booted and spurred, bronzed and bearded, strong, stalwart, manly and dirty, followed by a crowd, as usual, entered the vestibule.

Boy like, Johnnie wanted to see what was going on, and swept along by the crowd made no attempt to stem the tide, and was borne along with it, up the stairs, and to the Secretary's room, where he sat at his desk talking with a gentleman and lady.

The soldiers filed in, the crowd of idlers (Johnnie among them) filling the doorway. These were Custar's men, cavalry fresh from the front, and the officer halted his band in front of the desk, gave the military salute, and introduced himself:—

'Mr. Secretary, Sergeant John Smith of the Michigan Cavalry, who bears to you this battle-flag, captured by his own hand.'

That flag is among our trophies to-day, the dust of twenty years upon its folds.

The Secretary sprang up, in his quick, nervous way, and wrung the hands of the brave fellows in turn, then turning to the Sergeant asked brusquely.

'How came you by that flag, Sergeant?'

To obey orders and carry the flag to headquarters was one thing; to tell the story of its capture was another, and a far harder task, to the sturdy Wolverine who, up in his pine district, never dreamed he should shake hands with a cabinet officer, till the bugle of war sounded and he followed 'the sunny-hair' into the red sea of battle, for the honor and unity of his country, and made the astonishing discovery that the President and his cabinet were men, and, but for the terrible strain on brain and nerves, in a measure disguising their real selves, genial, warm-hearted, generous, manly men.

But, oh, that terrible ordeal of civil war, if it developed the heroic, it almost expunged the tenderer graces of humanity. How he told it, only those who heard the story remember. The records of the department mention the capture of such and so many flags, by this or that soldier, in a well known battle, with perhaps the brief addenda of 'distinguished bravery on the field,' or, 'gallant action'—the phraseology is hackneyed by the repetition.

John Smith was no orator. He told his story briefly, but eloquently in its very brevity, and he had a reward! The Secretary again wrung his hand, and turning to the lady, whose flushed cheeks and shining eyes gave evidence of her interest, said:

'Let me introduce you, Sergeant Smith, to Mrs. Custer, the wife of your commanding officer. We would be glad to see him here too, to-day, but we know he is better employed just now.'

As John Smith and his little band clasped the hand and looked into the sweet face of Elizabeth Custer, they felt that privilege was not least of their honors.

'Gen. Townsend, these brave fellows must have thirty days' furlough each, with transportation to and from their homes. Make out an order for one month's pay for each, and have medals of honor struck as soon as possible and sent to each man.'

Said the Secretary, promptly, 'Have we forgotten little Johnnie Green?'

Oh, no, there was another stroke of good luck to be reckoned on this day's account. Among these heroes was a townsman and neighbor of Johnnie, and once more clothed as became such a brave little fellow, with his money and his pass to his far-away home, Johnnie had the companionship of Sergt. Smith, and his little band all the long journey through.

That was twenty years ago. It is eighteen years since the great slaveholders' republic burst like a giant soap-bubble, for the corner-stone was human slavery, and God set men on the Western Continent to work out the great problem of human freedom. Again and again the figures have been rubbed out, but the equation is slowly forming. Given liberty, education, and political equality for all races and both sexes, x, the unknown quantity, must simply represent the number of years necessary for the preparation before the experiment can be fully realized.

In the quiet cemetery of Oak Hill on Georgetown Heights, set apart for near the entrance-gate, marked by a noble granite obelisk, rests the worn-out frame of our great War Secretary, Edwin M. Stanton. The morning and evening gun, the reveille, the roll-call, and taps from Fort Totten, mingle with the ceaseless plash of the sluggish Potomac, and the noisy ripple of Rock Creek, and the birds sing and flowers bloom and trees rustle above the grass covered grave, but the Secretary takes no note!

"The dead in their night-encampment on the hill,"

Away off on the rolling prairie where the broad acres slope gently down to the shores of a rippling lake, where the ripe, rustling wheat catches the first glint of the morning sun, and the velvet peach, shaming the artist's pencil, steals the rose of glorious russetts, stands a modest farm-house. Rose-vines climb to the eaves, and from May to November the air is sweet with flower odors each in its season. It is the home of peace, plenty, and prosperity. In the cosy little parlor, rich with choice flowers, books, and pictures, there is every evidence of taste and refinement. Over the piano is a large photograph. About its frame reverent hands have trained the heavy tendrils of the English ivy, forming a garland of living green about the tired, nervous face, that holds the place of honor in that happy household. Should you part those glossy leaves, you would find beneath a fac simile of the autograph of the man who made the poor little outcast drummer-boy the happiest child in the country twenty years ago. Beneath the picture on an easel made of holly-wood is a cabinet photograph of a boy in blue uniform leaning on a drum. A whistle sounds cheerfully in the distance, a shaggy dog bounds with a glad bark to meet a carriage, a tall broad-shouldered man with rich brown hair and heavy beard, throws the reins over the horse's neck, and springs lightly to the ground. It is only Farmer Green and his family, a handsome, bright-eyed lady, a boy of a dozen summers, and two pretty little girls. Would you recognize poor Johnnie Green in that handsome man?—Mark Grey Appleton, in Magnolia Leaves.

The Empire State, much improved in all respects, will soon begin its trips. Mr. H. A. M'Glenen, than whom no better agent could be found, will look after the management of these pleasant excursions as heretofore.

Millions Given Away.

Millions of bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, have been given away as Trial Bottles of the large size. This enormous outlay would be disastrous to the proprietors, were it not for the rare merits possessed by the wonderful medicine. Call at Spaulding's Drug Store and get a Trial Bottle free, and try for yourself. It never fails to cure.

When a fellow and a girl sit on the sofa in the twilight it may be considered as an illustration of the associated press.

Important to the Sick.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

"Yes" said the Deacon, "the organist certainly did play opera bouffe airs and the cancan in his voluntary, yesterday. But, dear me, I can't kick up a row about it, without giving myself away by showing that I recognised the music."

A Lawrence paper says that a poor woman in town was visited by a female missionary, who, in the conversation, asked her if she intended to bring her boy up to any trade. "Well," said the party addressed, "wid respects to yer, I think I shall bring him up to be an Odd Fellow."

(For the Press.)

Meditation on Prospect Hill.

Thoughts flash through the mind as one stands upon this summit of the above named eminence, and sends the glance of his eye over the surrounding fields, hills, towns or cities; and beyond all these, eastward, over the broad ocean, its silvery surface decked with crafts of different forms and sizes. Some, with their snowy sails unfurled, are moving on slowly, but majestically, to another port, well representing the lives of all good men wending their way to the Port of Peace. But some of those vessels may have torn sails, weak rudders and rotten hulls; and when called to face storms and tempests will suffer shipwreck, or never reach the haven they are seeking; not unfitly shadowing forth the course and the fate of some politicians, whose whole lives seem to be in pursuit of some office. But the tide of public opinion is against them, and they die disappointed. Was not Daniel Webster of such a craft as that? Testimony on that point comes from men, whose characters as true witnesses stand far above reproach. Mr. W. died a disappointed man.

Then there are ships in the harbor with no sails unfurled, but anchored. They remain motionless, fit emblems of some who have toiled through life, and old age tells them they must retire from active business lives and rest the remainder of their days. Small boats there who meet the eye, with no sails nor masts, but urged onward over the waves with the laboring oars; setting forth that class of honest men who seek no office, but toil on, year after year, for the support of themselves and those they love.

The ocean is in more senses than one "the sea of life." Fortunes are made on it by some, and fortunes are lost on it by others. Looking at it through a spy-glass from this eminence after a stormy day, the breakers rolling to the shore are tinged with the colors of the rainbow, well illustrating the history of the church of Christ, and also the religious experience of a single individual whose trust in times of trouble and affliction, has been in Him who trod the saucy wave and snatched weak Peter from a watery grave. And as has been said by some one, not one tear is ever shed by a good man now in sorrow, that does not hang heavier upon the Saviour's heart than any world upon His hand. His rich promises may be in the days of prosperity like the stars over us at noonday, unrealized, because not seen; but, let the night of adversity set in, and they flash out in all their effulgence. Bacon has somewhere said, "prosperity is not without many fears and distastes; neither is adversity without hopes and comforts. In needle work and embroideries, it is more pleasing to have a more lively work upon a sad and solemn ground, than to have a dark and melancholy work upon a lightsome ground; and we must judge therefore of the pleasure of the heart, by the pleasure of the eye."

Mont Blanc, although crowned with snow, is gilded with sunlight, and bears the northern violet on its bosom. Afflictions are for the benefit of those who bear them; and, as Plato has somewhere said, "the laws in the eternal world, and the sisters of the laws in this world, will give their enemies a fearful reception in eternity.

But perhaps from our subject we, like Coleridge, have seemed to wander, for of him it was once said, that the compass and huge circuit by which his illustrations moved, travelled into the remote regions before they began to revolve, so that long before his coming round commenced, most people had lost him, and naturally supposed he had lost himself. But, like him, we also come eventually round to the subject upon which we started. Yonder ocean of which we were speaking, is the great shrine of Nature, inlaid with the gems and diamonds of millions of men. Across its broad bosom some of the most noble ships have sailed, like the gods of Homer, winding their way among waving mountains, on the cars of ancient divinity, rolling on the surges of an earthquake. Just this side of the waters is the so called "City of Peace," a name unfitly applied; for a greater number of quarrels and fights taking place, in consequence of the free sale and use of intoxicating drinks (according to the number of those dwelling there) we read of in no published newspaper in any town or city.

Licensing rumsellers seems to be regarded by some as absolutely necessary, in order to avoid a greater evil, just as it is said that volcanoes, although some injury is done by them, yet, acting as great safety valves, are of great benefit, for without them the earth would burst, and the damage be immense; catastrophies would take place, and the death of thousands be the result. But such reasoning would not bear the criticism of an owl could he speak. It seems to be about on a level with the discussions that were indulged in, somewhere between the 5th and the 12th centuries on such questions as the following: "Whether God does not love a possibly existing angel more than He does an actually existing insect, or whether an angel could not pass from one point to another without being present in the intermediate state?" Soap bubbles always burst before they ascend high in the air. J. P.

(Written for The Press.)

Engineers.

It is getting to be unquestionably admitted that the locomotive driver of today is one of the bravest, as well as one of the most responsible men in his country. As he stands upon the footboard, beside his dust begrimmed fireman, let us look at his duties. He is about to make a run of perhaps seventy-five miles, guiding a freight of human beings; and the slightest error on his part in the interpretation of switch and signal colors, may result in a catastrophe. He is perfectly well aware of this, and yet daily he cheerfully takes the heavy responsibility upon his shoulders, and there it rests from the moment he takes his engine on his first trip, until he has returned it to the round house, on his last.

As he thunders through deep cuts, whirls over high bridges, jars over switches, his heavy machine bounding along with frightful velocity, the momentum is necessarily terrific, and should a wheel break, a parellel rod unjoint, a tire slip, or the rails be spread, his train would be dashed aside, and perhaps mangled, dismembered forms be buried beneath the wreck. As his engine rushes blindly through the night he is perfectly well aware that he is hand in hand with a horrible death; and as he stands with his hand on the throttle, piercing the blackness, lighted up for a few yards ahead, and then made doubly black, he knows that his life is n his Creator's hands, and that he can hardly call it his own. He knows that he may be hurled into eternity, without the slightest premonition—that he may never see home or dear ones again.

Still he does not flinch, but trusts in "luck" as he terms it, to carry him through in safety. The passengers give him no thought, but how often does he think of them, when he cannot instantly make out whether the track ahead is clear or obstructed. A switchman may have left a switch open after a freight train has passed out upon the main track, and ten to one he cannot check his train in season to avoid running over it, and crashing into the cars beyond. The engineer thinks of such things as these and they weigh upon his mind; and constant anxiety makes him haggard and careworn, long before nature would have him so.

And when he sees danger ahead, does he jump from his engine, and let the train crash into the obstruction? No. He does all that he can to check his speed, and then awaits the moment which he well knows may be his last, or may see him crushed or maimed beneath his struggling engine. And he does this to save the lives entrusted to his care, and not merely to save himself. The writer of this article is personally acquainted with ladies and gentlemen, who, whenever they leave a train either thank the engineer or bow to him for taking them through in safety, and they do it in heartfelt sincerity. All things taken into consideration, the railroad driver, no matter whether running a shifter or the "Flying Dutchman," is rightly termed the bravest man amongst us; and when years have rolled away into the mists of oblivion, and when safer methods of transit an been devised, his deeds of daring at the voluntary risk of his own life, will be better appreciated than they are at present. MOTOR.

BOUNDLESS SOLITUDE.—A sensilbe young lady made the following request to her friends: "Do not lay me down by the rippling brook's side, lest babbling lovers wake me from my dreams, nor in the beautiful cemeteries in the valleys, lest sight-seers conning over epitaphs, distract me; but let my last sleep be under the counter of the merchant and the business man generally who never advertises. There is the peace that passeth all understanding, and a deep sleep in which neither the buoyant footfall of youth nor the weary shuffle and drag of old age will ever intrude."—Utica Observer.

The Special Senses have been termed the "Five Gateways of Knowledge," from the fact that they receive and transmit to the brain impressions regarding surrounding objects thro' their nerves. The nose, or organ of smell, is a double-chambered cavity, lined with a mucous membrane, over which is spread numerous nerve filaments, branches of the olfactory nerves, for the reception of odoriferous impressions. Catarrh soon destroys the sense of smell, causes inflammation of the membrane, rapidly becomes offensive and culminates by becoming chronic. Ely's Cream Balm cures catarrh, no matter how long it has existed. It is not a liquid or snuff. 50 cents.

New York Chinese laundrymen nearly killed a Celestial brother who undertook to work at lower rates than the accepted scale. Evidently the Mongolians are becoming civilized.

EDITORIAL EXPRESSIONS.—An expression common in these days of nominations is, "While a portion of the ticket is not such as we would have nominated, we shall give it our hearty support." This means that the editor's most bitter enemy, who will give the printing to the other paper if he can, is on the ticket, and the editor hopes that the low-down reptile may be beaten out of sight.

In the case of distinguished orations, the remark, "The Hon. Mr. Blank was attacked with a sudden indisposition and did not speak," means that the venerable statesmon was too drunk to hold his head up. The observation means the same thing when applied to the lights of the American stage.

"We failed to catch the last works of the speech" means that the eloquence at that particular period was drowned in "budge."

"We regret that we have no space to publish the gentleman's eloquent effort in full" means that, in the editor's opinion, the speech would have made a reflective mule leave his oats and that it would be an outrage on the public to print it.

"We may refer to the address hereafter" means that the newspaper man feels happy at getting out of it this time and trusts that perdition may seize him if he ever mentions the matter again.

In obituary notices "congestion of the brain," when applied to a gentleman of easy views in regard to drinks, means delirium tremens, and "he was his own worst enemy" means that the deceased was a drunkard and the worst enemy of the people who loaned him money. "He had his faults, who of us have not?" is an equivalent expression.

In regard to performances, dramatic and otherwise, "those who failed to be present missed a rich treat" means that everybody failed.

"The audience was small but appreciative" means that nobody was present but the holders of complimentaries.

"Owing to the inclemency of the weather the audience was not what it would have been" means that nobody would have been there had the sky been clear as crystal and the "neighborhood been fanned by spicy breezes" that, according to the hymn-book, "blow soft o'er Ceylon's isle."

In the way of dramatic criticism, "Mr Montgomery shows some crudity and inexperience, which will doubtless disappear with time and study," means that Mr M. is a hopeless and irredeemable stick.

Finally, "a scandal in high life has been brought to our notice of which we will have more to say in a few days," that means—well, that means "business."

BRANCH OUT.—"Young man, go West" has a greater significance and meaning to-day than ever before in the history of the country. Never before have the great eastern cities and towns been so crowded and overrun, and business of nearly all kinds overdone, as at the present time. It is almost literally true that there are a half dozen men ready to fill every position offered, whether it be as a laborer or skilled mechanic, bookkeeper, clerk, or overseer; and there has got to be a thinning-out process here in our crowded centres. The great West and Southwest, and even some sections of the South must relieve us of the surplus, and where, under the great progress that has been made in the past twenty years, since the war, in clearing up the country and introducing manufacturing in all its varied details, can better opportunities be presented, for young men especially to enter into business and grow up with the country than in these sections?

The rapid growth of some of the great Western cities is little short of a phenomenon. It is within forty or fifty years that Chicago was almost a barren wilderness, Milwaukee was a sand-heap, Minneapolis was only a country village, St. Louis was a town, and so on through the list of those cities, which now number their populations by the hundreds of thousands and take high rank as commercial centres. The extension of railroad facilities into nearly every nook and corner opens up the possibilities of this vast area of country, which is as yet only partially developed, and which in the not distant future, is destined to wield a great influence in the affairs of he nation. It is "getting in" at the start that tells, and if there are any young men, possessing snap and energy who are dragging out a miserable existence here, only picking up the crumbs that fall from the tables of the rich, we would say, most emphatically, "Go West," but don't expect that wealth will pour into your coffers without work or that, like the Irishman who came to this country and who refused to pick up a quarter of a dollar which he saw lying on the ground, because he thought he should soon come to the "hapes," you will not have some "up hill" work to accomplish desired ends. The West is all right, but the men who go there must be all right, too.

If you feel "all run down" and overcome with the heat, try a bottle of Morse's Yellow Dock. It is the best summer tonic and blood purifier ever offered to the public.

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

To the Inhabitants and other Persons liable to pay Taxes in the Town of Peabody.

The Assessors of the Town of Peabody hereby give notice to the inhabitants of said town, and all other persons liable to pay taxes therein, that their office will be open on and after the first day of May until and including the first day of June, and all persons liable to be taxed in said town are hereby required to bring in at the said office true and perfect lists of all the polls (males twenty years old, and upward), and schedules and estimates of the personal estates for which they are liable to pay taxes.

Copartnerships

having a place of business in Peabody, and also in some other city or town within the Commonwealth, are especially notified to bring in a statement in accordance with the 24th section of the 11th chapter of the Public Statutes. Shipping and business income are not taxable to a firm, but each resident partner must include these items in his individual return.

Mortgaged Real Estate.

"Any mortgagor or mortgagee of real estate may bring in to the assessors of the town or city where such real estate lies," within the time specified in this notice, "a statement, under oath, of the amount due on each separate lot or parcel of such real estate, and the name and residence of every holder of an interest therein as a mortgagee or mortgagor. When such property is situated in two or more places, or when a recorded mortgage includes for one sum two or more estates or parts of an estate, an estimate of the amount of the mortgagee's interest in each estate or part of an estate shall be given in such statement." [Chap. 175 of the Acts of 1882]. When a statement in conformity with the law above quoted is brought in, the real estate therein returned will be assessed under sections 14, 15 and 16, of chapter 11 of the Public Statutes. But in cases where the mortgagor of the real estate has agreed in writing to pay all taxes assessed thereon, NO STATEMENT OR RETURN IS REQUIRED from either mortgagee or mortgagor, unless requested by the assessors in writing.

Estates in Trust.

Persons holding estates in trust, whether for minors or otherwise, are particularly requested to furnish the assessors with statements in relation to such estates. When trust estates, or estates of persons deceased, have been divided during the past year or have changed hands from other causes, the trustee, executor or administrator, or other person interested, is required and warned to give notice of such change; and in default of such notice, will be held to pay the tax assessed, although such estate has been wholly distributed and paid over.

Any person bringing in a list of all his taxable personal property will be assessed upon the valuation thereof, and any one neglecting to furnish the assessors with such list within the time above specified will be deemed at a legal meeting of the Board of Assessors, agreeably to the law of the Commonwealth. All persons will take notice that statements of personal property must be in writing, and subscribed under oath before one of the Assessors, at their office, on or before the FIRST DAY OF JUNE, and that the personal property of all taxable persons must be estimated by the Board, NOTWITHSTANDING A VERBAL STATEMENT OR INFORMAL WRITTEN COMMUNICATION TO ANY ONE OR MORE OF THE ASSESSORS. [Pub. Stat., chap. 11, sec. 39 and 41.] When a person has failed to bring in a list or schedule of all his taxable property, in conformity to this notice, no abatement of a tax so assessed upon such person for personal property can be granted, "unless such tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the amount which would have been assessed to that person on personal estate, if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per cent. the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above the said fifty per cent. [Pub. Stat., Chap. 11, Sec. 73.]

Any person taxable in Peabody for personal property can obtain a BLANK SCHEDULE for making a list of such property, with directions for properly filling the same, by applying at the assessors' office.

Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations.

The attention of the Officers of all Literary, Benevolent, Charitable and Scientific Corporations, located in Peabody, is particularly called to the requirements of Chapter 217 of the Acts of 1882, as the property of said corporations, both personal and real, will be subject to taxation unless the law is complied with. Blank forms for the purpose can be had at the office of the assessors.

THE LABOR troubles in Marblehead have had the effect to drive several of the large shoe manufactories away from the town. If this is called a success by those who sympathize with the workmen, it is a queer way of looking at it. We should regard the removal of any large manufactory from our town, from any cause, as a serious calamity. And when the laboring people of Marblehead prefer that this should happen, leading of course to the employment of fewer people, and the consequent reduction of business, than that they should deviate one iota from the demands of a Union which is more tyrannical over them than any employer—they are certainly losing sight of their own interests.

In this trouble the Union of the laborers was met by the formation of a Union by the Manufacturers. And why should this not be so? If a Union is good for one it is good for the other. Yet it is a notorious fact that these labor Unions are kept alive by the leaders, who seek thereby to gain political influence. They claim to be the friend of the working men; but beyond the control of their votes, they care but little for them. Many of the so called labor reform papers circulated in Marblehead, also, are responsible to no small degree, for the fanning of what was only a little breeze of difficulty into a large flame. The feelings of the men have been worked on, and roused to bitterness against the manufacturers, by cheap talk about the rights of labor and the tyranny of capital. The right of labor to make terms for its hire, to leave work if not satisfied, no one disputes. If they would stop here, there would be little trouble. But in their code, this right means not only to quit work themselves but to prevent any one else from making their own terms for their labor. It this is not tyranny, we fail to understand the meaning of the word. Even if Marblehead succeeds in restoring harmony between the employers that remain and the employes, which now seems probable, the damage to her prosperity is not repaired. Manufacturers with capital seeking investment will hesitate many times before locating there. And the papers which have spread broadcast sensational reports of the difficulties, bringing the town into such notoriety, are doing an injury which it is beyond their power to remedy.

IT IS evident to those who have occasion to be on the streets on Sunday and Sunday evening, that there is not a sufficient number of police to protect respectable citizens from insult from the class of roughs who lounge about the square and fountain in front of the depot, and that a special officer for that beat should be appointed. That the police do all in their power we have no doubt, but they cannot be everywhere at once, and although they rout loungers from their resting places on doorsteps and corners, they return as soon as the police are out of sight, and perhaps the very next passer by is obliged to listen to their low wit and obscene and vulgar conversation. Nor is this all; the enforcement of the Sunday law, in relation to liquor dealers in the vicinity of the square, is another reason why a special police officer should be assigned to duty there. We have it from good authority that last Sunday a gentleman stood near the entrance of one of these licensed saloons, and during fifteen or twenty minutes, saw twenty-eight persons, mostly young men, enter this place. Similar stories are told us by reliable parties in reference to other places licensed and unlicensed. One gentleman recently told the Selectmen that he was ready to furnish evidence to convict every rum seller in his neighborhood, of violating the Sunday law, if that body would agree to revoke their license. To be sure, the amount appropriated for police is not as much as last year, but the Selectmen have authority to exceed the appropriation if they see fit. There would be no lack of evidence to convict these parties of Sunday selling, if they want it, and are willing to look for it. And now to be plain, it is time that some decided action was taken. The PRESS don't want any fight, nor does it desire to call any names, but for if the good of the town, we consider it our duty, we shall not hesitate to speak, and free our minds. If we are to have a license law, let us have it enforced.

MESSRS. EDITORS,—Your correspondent, Z., gave in your last paper "the facts" concerning an assault and attempted highway robbery of Jacob Rand, on Tremont street, on Decoration day evening. Will Z. tell the public how he came in possession of "the facts?" If they are "facts" why have not the town authorities bestirred themselves to search and punish the assailants? Can even the humblest of our people be assaulted and beaten on our streets and nothing be done about it?

I look for no answers to these questions because I am sure "the facts" are not facts. The why for my belief follows. On the evening of May 30, a trifle after seven o'clock, the Rand brothers drove (they were not walking) up Tremont street, from Salem, alighted from their wagon, the new one which they sometimes use, and went into Corbett's saloon on the corner of Love Lane. Neither was helped in.—At about quarter of eight Joe Rand, with the help of two men who live in that vicinity, brought Jacob out in an apparently lifeless condition and loaded him into the wagon. A gentleman went twice at my earnest request and looked into the vehicle. He reported first that he was, to all appearances, dead, and had been laid upon his face. I sent the person back to see that there was no danger of Rand smothering.—In the meantime Joe had gone back into the shop for something more of what is kept there. No one at the time acknowledged that the man was drunk, but remarked that he was "in a fit." The man who went and looked into the wagon reported "the facts" for publication, and information to the public, but lies got the start as they always do in like cases.

I wish to state that Corbett has been properly requested—as our infernal liquor law permits—not to sell or give the Rand boys liquor, or to have them on his premises, but has never heeded the request. They have gone away from his place more than once since this notification in a terrible condition. On the day in April that three of our honorable board of Selectmen called upon Corbett to ascertain how many rear entrances his place had, preparatory to licensing him, the Rands loaded manure at the barn on the premises, after which the horse waited a long time while they remained in the shop. At dusk one was brought out and laid at full length on the manure, and the other was boosted by strong hands on to the seat of the wagon, given the reins and sent away. There has been some effort made under the law to defend these men from their own appetites and the rapacity of drinksellers, but so far it has come to nought. Let these facts go to the ears of fathers and mothers, that they may realize how their boys will be treated when by the help of the town they are legally made drunkards.

I beg the one who put the crape on the Rand brothers' door to turn his tricks in that line to the doors of the rumshops. There the signal of warning and death is needed. But for "the cubs," as they are frequently called, or such as they in lesser degree, stint not your pity. If we knew the pre-natal influences that made them what they are we should observe them with widely different views. But the dram shops, permitted and encouraged to deal out woe and misery for the lifelong endurance by some, and the birth-right of suffering to many others, has no rights, morally or legally, that decent people are bound to respect. PEABODY.

Last Sunday there were many of the former friends of Rev. L. L. Wood at the Baptist church to give him a hearty greeting. The pulpit was elegantly decorated with flowers. On each side was a bouquet on small tables; on the front of the desk was a pyramidical bouquet of tea roses; on the platform in front of the desk was a beautiful basket of red and white pinks, while on either side was a vase of calla lilies and ferns, besides a small bouquet on the preacher's table. Mr. Wood read for a scriptural lesson from the tenth of Romans and the eleventh of Acts, taking for his text verses 13, 14 and 15 of the tenth chapter of Romans: "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How, then, shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent? As it is written, How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!" Mr. Wood said, "When the Northmen settled in England they raised the war cry, and when the Pilgrims landed in New England they began with prayer, and ever since has New England equalled the mother country in some things, and surpassed her in many things, and more particularly in recognizing Jesus Christ. I shall speak this morning of the duty of carrying out this text in relation to the western part of our country. I firmly believe God has ordained this country to be distinguished in religious sources. The completion of the Northern Pacific R. R., which will take place in a few months, the fourth line from the Atlantic to the Pacific, will still more help to bind the whole world in material and spiritual intercourse. When we consider the wonders God is developing in this country it must seem to all that it is His design to use them all to bind us nearer together and make this country the grand missionary field of the world. Take if you please, the place where I am located, Montana did not exist a score of years ago; her area is twice that of New England; first, mining interests attracted attention, these are what are known as quartz mines, and have been developed without railroads, and have developed the richest of treasures, Virginia City alone producing more than $145,000,000 in gold and silver bullion. And this is only a single source of wealth. Here the people are crazy for wealth and are forgetful of higher thoughts in their rush for gold. The grazing resources in this country are in excess of its mining; thousands of cattle roam the fields and while the owner sleeps he is accumulating wealth and in a few years he realizes that he is a millionaire. The agricultural resources depend upon irrigation, while it has one of the most beautiful climates; the land is dry and we have very little rain. During the past winter there has probably not been more than a week of sleighing, yet the year round the lofty peaks of the mountains are covered with snow, making some of the grandest scenery in the world, and from the snow cap heights streams are continually running down the side, and these are being utilized to enrich the land and make it suitable for agriculture, and people will flock there more and more, and will strive for wealth without the thought of God. These people are hard to reach because they have become demoralized; they have secured wealth, but have not thought of God; they are infidels, and are educated and will not support a man sent to preach to them not their equal, and this has been a mistake of the Missionary society in sending second rate ministers to this country, and if they will make it a missionary ground, there is no country that will pay a better return than this. There are in Montana, four Baptist churches, and when the people are converted they are able to support and extend them; you may say, are the people in Peabody all converted that we should send missionaries to Montana? but itwas God's intention that the whole world should hear his word. There are the Chinese, who are indispensable to that country, as they live cheaper and perform work that no others would do; they are all pagan and just as typical Chinese as in Hong Kong. They are anxious to learn so as to make money in this country; they move and live in themselves, having their own stores and after acquiring sufficient means return to their own country. There is no field in which more missionary work can be done than on the Northern Pacific, and we believe there is something better for that part of our country than heaping up silver and gold; that this country can be developed for the glory of God. Remember our churches are small and few in number; where I am preaching is the largest and will only hold three hundred. There is to be found there everything except the gospel of Christ, a treasure they find last, but remember there are immortal souls for eternal life in all dark places, and these gems are to be diadems in the land on high, by living forth in Jesus Christ."

Tuesday afternoon on the invitation of H. E. Reed, the manager of the Roller Skating Rink at the Willows, a party of the members of the press of this vicinity, accompanied by Mr. Ferguson, the Superintendent of the Naumkeag railroad, visited that resort. The party left the station in Salem at 2.35 in a car for the Willows, and were soon landed at the rink, which has been entirely remodeled since last season. The old inclined plane for a balcony has been removed, and twenty feet more all round added to the skating surface, the dimensions of which are now 81x113 feet. A lower gallery has been put in, in a semi-circle opposite the stage, and the upper gallery built over, giving a better view of the skaters and furnishing accommodations for about 500 spectators. The place for the delivery of skates has been changed to the opposite side from that of last year, and taken out of the stage, where bins have been arranged for the different sizes—and everything is in first class order for the accommodation of the public. In the room, unopened, were 200 pair of new skates, never used, of the Winslow make. An electric bell will be put in and strike five minutes before each horse car leaves the rink for Beverly, Salem or Peabody, so that patrons who desire to leave on a certain car can remain in the rink till the last moment. The fun will begin to-morrow afternoon, when the Naumkeag management will begin their regular trips to the Willows. The rink will be opened every afternoon and evening, and music will be furnished every evening and Wednesday and Saturday afternoons by the Salem Cadet Band. After spending some time at the rink the party were introduced to Mr. Davis, the new proprietor of the Pavilion, who extended the hospitalities of the place. A much needed improvement has been made here in the transfer of the dining hall to the lower floor, which was used formerly as a dance hall. There is more room for guests—the place is now secluded, and the patrons will avoid the long flight of stairs entering to the old dining room. Mr. Davis has a reputation as a successful caterer—was formerly of the Pavilion in Gloucester, and has managed several hotels in Florida to the entire satisfaction of the guests. After viewing the many improvements at this breezy resort, among which were the new police station and the road in the rear of the little cafes opposite the Pavilion, the party were in good condition to accept the invitation of Messrs. Reed and Davis to enjoy a little spread which had been prepared. These gentlemen presided at the table and all the delicacies of a fish supper were temptingly placed before the representatives of the press. Not satisfied with this, a juicy porter house steak, cooked in the style for which we are informed Mr. Davis is celebrated, was brought on. All we can say is, if the patrons of the Pavilion are served in the style with which the party were tempted yesterday—the success of the new lessee is assured from the word go. Mr. Davis is a genial host, his son who is associated with him has the reputation of being one of the best cooks in the country, the young lady attendants are polite and anxious to serve their patrons—and our readers cannot fail to be pleased with the new arrangements.

We were invited lately to inspect a Crosby Invalid Bed at Goulding's, that had been made on special order. We have often heard of the points of advantage possessed by this bed, and were pleased to see it in all points, added, in this case, to a finely finished Black Walnut frame. Besides the bed and trundle bed, there was added a patent hand rest, raised and lowered in the most gradual and noiseless manner by a new style crank and gear. Also a patent table, adjusted to the side of the bed to be raised and lowered, or slanted to any angle, by an ingenious and patented arrangement. The hand rest and table are quite different from those formerly in use, and are very useful and ornamental. Mr. G. has several of the Crosby Beds in use that he lets by the week. They are highly endorsed by our doctors, and have been very thoroughly tested here during the past year.

Archelaus L. Robinson, one of our old and respected citizens of Lowell street, died suddenly last Friday evening at the age of 79 years. Mr. Robinson was born in New Brunswick, and during his residence here has worked at his trade as a shoemaker in a little shop on Lowell street. He was apparently in good health the day of his death, having walked to the square and back. The attending physicians were of the opinion that paralysis of the heart was the cause of death. His wife survives him. His funeral took place last Monday at 2 o'clock.

It would be a good plan if the grass around the fountain in front of the railroad station was cut occasionally. This work used to be done by Mr. J. M. Ward, and he was paid for it by Mr. Lyman Holman, who used to take a great interest in seeing things looking nice and tidy.

There met at the residence of Mrs. Andrew Gray on Washington street, yesterday, three ladies whose average age was 82 years, and each worked without glasses, two knitting and one crocheting.

A funny incident happened in front of John Pickering's last Monday morning during the shower. There was only one clap of thunder and that was very loud. Just as it came an Irishman, who had not wholly recovered from his potations of the day before, became frightened, fell on his knees, clasped his hands and begun a prayer for mercy.

A great treat is before the children of the town. The W. C. T. U. is soon to have Mrs. Nellie H. Bayley, of Chicago, the National Superintendent of Juvenile work, here. She talks in a most entertaining and instructive manner to the young and with the help of a blackboard illustrates her lectures. She has had excellent success in the west in this line of temperance work.

As the horse car from Salem that arrived at the Square about nine o'clock last Saturday evening, was unloading its passengers, the conductor of car No. 46, backed his car down beside it, hitting several people, and it is a wonder no one was seriously hurt. The funny conductor seemed to think it a good joke instead of gross carelessness on his part.

Yesterday afternoon, Mr. Edward A. Blaney, of the firm of Blaney & Moore, morocco manufacturers, and Miss Addie Demeritt were united in marriage, at their new residence on the corner of Central and Stevens street, Rev. F. W. Sprague, of the Universalist church, officiating. The newly wedded couple left immediately for a visit to New York and vicinity.

A man named Timothy Brennan, employed as horse shoer by Arthur T. Dodge, was severely injured yesterday morning as he was engaged in shoeing a horse belonging to J. N. Burbeck.—The horse suddenly kicked, striking the man on the leg, inflicting a bad bruise, and also striking him on the arm below the elbow, breaking the limb badly, which the attending physician thinks will lay him up some two months.

The shower on Monday afternoon had a very strange effect on the quadrupeds in this vicinity, at least our sporting editor, who drives a hack got very much excited and dashed off the following: Just before the rainfall, a yowling and squalling and spitting, called our attention to the rear of this office, where a cat skirmish was in operation; the fur flew for about half a minute, when one valiantly retreated over the fence, and the fight ended. Immediately after the shower ceased a loud growling, and howling, and snapping called our attention to the rear of the building, where two dogs, one named "Jeff" and the other "Rover" were at it tooth and nail; they bit, and howled, and snarled, and snapped, and grappled for about two minutes, when Rover walked off in a dignified manner, leaving Jeff master of the field.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

At the meeting of the School Committee last Monday night the following order of school examinations for 1883 was agreed upon:

Monday, June 18. Wallis, Center and Bowditch Sub-Primaries.

Tuesday, June 19. A. M., Wallis, classes 4, 5; P. M., 6, 7, 8.

Wednesday, June 20. A. M., Bowditch, classes 5, 6, 7, 8.

Thursday, June 21. A. M., Center, classes 4, 5; P. M., 6, 7, 8.

Friday, June 22. A. M., Rockville Schools; P. M., West Schools.

Saturday, June 23. A. M., Bowditch, classes 1, 2, 3, 4.

Monday, June 25. Wallis, classes 1, 2, 3.

Tuesday, June 26. Center, classes 1, 2, 3.

Wednesday, June 27. High School Examination.

Thursday, June 28. High School Exhibition.

Friday, June 29. Examination of candidates for High School; P. M., Felton Schools.

To these examinations a cordial invitation is extended to the parents to be present. It is encouraging not only to the scholars, but the teachers, to note such an interest in the citizens whose children are members of their school.

Many of our readers may have noticed that Conductor Tibbets of the Naumkeag Horse Railroad Co., has had a "striker," so called, on his car with him for the past few weeks, and they may have also observed that he spoke English with great difficulty. Our coins seemed to trouble him exceedingly and it was only by the patient efforts of Conductor Tibbets that he was able to master the requisite knowledge to fit him for the position. Yet he was a man of fine education and much natural ability—speaking several different languages. He was a Pole, Yousheensky, by name, having left his native land some fifteen years ago, on account of some family difficulties. He remained on the horse railroad about three weeks, until Tuesday, June 5th. He had received a letter from a brother at home desiring his return, enclosing a draft of about $1500—and promising him an engagement as agent of an iron mill at a large salary. He sailed last Saturday for Poland, but previously presented Conductor Tibbets, who had been so kind to him, with an elegant watch charm, heavily chased and of solid gold, bearing on its reverse both names. Mr. Tibbets will cherish it as a memento of an interesting incident in his life.

The new building which Mr. J. B. Thomas is erecting for George Stevens is nearly completed. The carpenter work has been done by Mayhew S. Clark and the plastering by J. Arthur Trask, who finished skim-coating it Saturday night. It will make a sensible addition to the previously cramped quarters of Mr. Stevens, and be welcomed by the public. The partition is to be removed and the whole thrown into one store. The long counter will be extended into the new part, and the larger portion of the room given to the use of the public, who are waiting for the horse cars. Mr. Foster, the Superintendent of the Lynn & Boston horse railroad, was over yesterday and formally ratified an arrangement for its use as a station, which was consummated last week. Mr. Stevens will have a nice glass front in the new store, and a large and elegant sign "Horse Railroad Station" will be furnished by the railroad company. The new office will be open every day in the week, for the convenience of patrons of the road. The present entrance to Mr. Stevens' store, will, however, be closed on the Sabbath. It was hoped the new building would be ready for occupancy this week, but from present indications this is not probable.

Nicholas Vandenburg and his wife, a German family, who lived in this town some ten years ago and afterwards removed to Beacon Hill, New York State, were suffocated to death recently by impure gases in an old well. A negro employed by Mr. Vandenburg was cleaning the well and feeling the asphyxiating influences of the gases called for help. Mr. V. descended to assist him and was overpowered. Mrs. Vandenburg then descended to aid her husband and was also overcome. They were finally extricated from the well by neighbors and soon after Mr. Vandenburg and his wife expired, while the negro was alive at last reports. Mr. V. was a farmer and when he lived here was employed at the clay pits at Danvers.

James Conley intended last Saturday afternoon to take the one o'clock train to Danvers, in order to attend his brother's funeral. He missed the train however, and then after imbibing several times on the strength of his disappointment, laid down near the Central street bridge, and attracted the attention of the passers by.

As Willie, son of William Blaney, was driving his father's horse down Foster street last Saturday morning, the wagon struck the curb stone and threw the seat from its position, and the boy on to the footboard, and nearly under the horse's feet. With remarkable presence of mind he climbed back into the wagon. The horse had become thoroughly frightened, and started and ran; the boy after getting into the wagon, seeing he could not escape from the forward part started to the rear and got out, but had a narrow escape. When he struck the ground he was thrown with considerable violence, but strange to say received no injury. The horse proceeded up Central street to the owner's stable, without doing any damage.

Last Friday the Board of Health took Carr's Coupe and started on a tour of inspection of the different brooks and some of the pig pens etc., about town. It was found that Goldthwaite's brook would need immediate attention; the most serious difficulty being on Walnut street, where the water main crosses the brook. Here was found an accumulation, making a dam a foot and a half high, and in the sluggish water above the dam was the usual collection of filth, dead dogs and debris. It is probable that the board will recommend the lowering of the water main.

Letters advertised June 13; W. O. Bartlett, Bridget Clear, Lawrence Cuddire, Daniel T. Donovan, John Dearden, Florence Donhue, C. F. French, James Flint, Annie Gorman, E. N. Harris, Michael Harrigan, James Jeffrey, James Kelley, Mrs. Jackson Kennedy, Andrew Kinsley, Miss M. McDonald, J. J. McCarthy, John P. McCarthy, Mrs. S. G. B. Nichols, Mrs. Noonan, S. Patterson, John J. Ryan, Patrick Ryan, Jos. O. Stone, Minnie B. Welch, John Walsh.

Mr. G. E. Doyle, brother of Dr. H. C. Doyle of this town, died at Rockport, Mass. last Wednesday, of typhoid fever, after a brief illness. He was formerly employed as telephone operator in this town. A short time since, he visited the West, but not having much success, he came back and went to Rockport, his native place, and took a position in the mill where he had been formerly employed. He was a young man of good qualities and many friends will mourn his loss. He was 22 years of age.

The Malden Mirror says: Rev. C. N. Smith of Peabody is having a Queen Anne cottage of seven rooms built on Hillside avenue. The carpenter work is being done by Mr. G. M. Bell and the mason work by Mr. H. R. Lewis. Mr. Smith has not been able to learn anything of the pocketbook which he lost in Malden a month ago. Somebody must have a guilty conscience.

During the shower last Thursday evening, the lightning struck in a pond near the residence of Mr. Robert Buxton, which he had stocked with pickerel. The next morning he picked out eighteen dead fish which were floating on the water. Since then he has taken thirty-two dead fish from the pond, weighing from two to three pounds apiece. He thinks that all in the pond were killed.

Last Friday noon the three masted schooner D. W. McLain passed through Beverly bridge with a cargo of 420 tons of coal for Sanger, Hood & Co., of Danversport. It took about twenty minutes to pass the draw through the bridge, detaining twenty six vehicles and a horse car. This was the largest vessel that ever passed through the draw, and the largest cargo that ever went up the river. It took only fifteen hours to unload it, which is considered remarkably quick time.

The story is going the rounds of the papers that Winslow's yacht "Excelsior" left T wharf in Boston recently at 12.30 o'clock p. m., and arrived at her moorings off Frisbee's wharf in Salem at 1.45 o'clock p. m., making the trip in just 1 1-4 hours, which is quick passage for an 18 ton yacht. This item reads as if the reporter got his information from Joe Littlefield, as it reads a good deal like his yarns.

The one hundred and eighth anniversary of the battle of Bunker Hill will be celebrated this year on Monday June 18th, the 17th falling on Sunday. And the Charlestown people will celebrate in shape too. The sham fight under the management of Post 5, G. A. R., at the Point of Pines, will attract a large number from here.

It is reported that the Standard Leather Measuring Machine Company, of Boston, employ certain parties in this town to watch the movements of Mr. David T. Winter and report his every movement to them. We could hardly believe that any of our citizens would be so contemptibly mean.

Writing Papers. A large assortment of writing papers by the pound. Parties wishing such will do well to give us a call. Smith & Robinson, 42 Market street, Lynn. Successors to S. A. Barton.

It is the early potato that catches the bug.

So. Peabody.—Mr. Robert Brown has had on four teams grading the horse railroad track with gravel from S. K. Newhall's pit the past week.

The carpenters have been at work the past week finishing off the vestibule of the church.

The lightning struck the old dam at Sidney's pond last Monday morning, doing only slight damage.

There will be a Sabbath School concert at the church next Sunday evening.

"Billy" Hayes is putting a covering on the Adams house, and making other needed improvements.

Mr. George Raddin died yesterday morning after a long and painful illness.

Mr. Orrin R. Evans has purchased the estate now occupied by Nathaniel Putnam for $1350.

A horse attached to a light express wagon, belonging to Lewis Brown, of South Peabody, was left standing on Lynnfield street on Saturday evening last, the owner being absent for a few minutes. When he came back he found his team was missing. A search was made and it was subsequently found that a gentleman in the southern part of the town had taken the team for the purpose of taking a ride; after riding about the neighborhood to his satisfaction, the team was delivered to Daniel Hogan, who returned it to the owner.

A man and performing bear were seen last Friday, giving exhibitions about town. Chief of Police Peasley ordered the man from town, but he immediately showed a license to travel in any part of the state. Several horses were frightened by him.

Six horse cars an hour on the Lynn road last Sunday, or what was equal to one every ten minutes. And people were better accommodated than any previous Sunday.

Michael Hayes killed two black snakes in the rear of the "pound" at So. Peabody last Sunday. One measured nearly four and a half feet and the other little over three.

2800 through passengers on the Lynn road last Sunday.

Mr. Walter Galeucia killed a black snake yesterday afternoon on County street, that measured four feet and nine inches.

The improvements at Spring pond, which were provided for by an appropriation of $4000 by the town, are being pushed forward by Henry N. Batchelder, who employs a force of about twenty men to prosecute the work. They have been about six weeks on the job and it will yet be several weeks before it is completed. The mud is being removed, the basin cleared out, embankments and walls built, and it will be a much needed work. The water is expected to be equal to anything in the state when the improvements are finished.

West Peabody.—The ladies' society will hold a strawberry festival at West Peabody Hall this (Wednesday) evening. An entertainment will be given consisting of readings and music. Strawberries, ice cream and cake will be for sale. This is the first entertainment of the kind to be given here, although our village friends have indulged in that mild dissipation.

Mrs. Joel Hewes, lately living on what is called Tophet hill in Lynnfield, the widow of the late Joel Hewes, was found dead in her bed on Wednesday morning last. The probable cause of her death was heart disease.

An old crow was killed near Lynnfield last Thursday, with a gold quarter of a dollar tied to its leg.

The new engine which J. E. Clement & Co. have been building for their own use was started up Monday morning. The new room off the main building was ready some weeks ago, and the engine is a model. It is 25 horse power and occupies a space about ten feet long. It is furnished with Watson's governor, with stop motion, so that it by accident the belt comes off the engine stops. There is also on the regulator board a regulator indicating the speed of the engine, a steam gauge and a clock. On the side of the cylinder is also an attachment indicating the pressure of steam at different parts of the cylinder. This is seldom found on small engines. It is also fitted with brass piping.

There was in town last Friday, a surplus of street music—a man with a hand organ, another with a hand organ and a monkey, three men, two with violins and another with a harp, besides the man with a performing bear. All these attractions in one day and "you paid your pennies and took your choice."

Next Sunday will be observed as Childrens' Sunday at the Methodist Church. In the afternoon, at the usual time of service, there will be short addresses by the pastor and other speakers well known in the denomination, on Sunday School work. Singing will be by the Sabbath School. In the evening at 7.30 there will be a Sabbath School Concert.

UNEQUALED FOR COLDS IN THE HEAD, HEADACHE AND DEAFNESS or any kind of mucus membranal irritations, inflamed and rough surfaces. A preparation of undoubted merit. Apply by the little finger into the nostrils. It will be absorbed, effectually cleansing the nasal passages of catarrhal virus, causing healthy secretions. It allays inflammation, protects the membranal linings of the head from additional colds, completely heals the sores and restores the sense of taste and smell. Beneficial results are realized by a few applications. A thorough treatment will cure. Send for circular. Will deliver by mail 50c a package—postage stamps. Sold by wholesale and retail druggists.

HIS OPINION.

IN CLEAR SENTENCES AN AUTHORITY ADDS HIS OWN TO THE POPULAR JUDGMENT.

191 West Tenth Street,
New York, Aug. 11, 1880.

MESSRS. SEABURY & JOHNSON:
I am slow to pin my faith to any new curative agent. BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER has won my good opinion. I find it an exceptionally cleanly plaster to use and rapid in its action. Many tests of its qualities in my own family, and among my patients, have convinced me that there is no other single article so valuable for popular use, none so helpful in cases of Lame Back, Local Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Congestion of the Bronchial Tubes and Lungs and Lumbago. You may feel free to use my name. Very truly yours,
H. H. KANE, M. D.,
Physician-in-Chief of the De Quincy Home.
Price of the CAPCINE 25 cents.

Book Notices.

The June number of the SEASON, published by the International News Co., of New York, should be in the hands of all our lady readers. It is a magazine which is of great value, because the suggestions therein contained and the plates illustrating the styles, are reliable. Every dressmaker recognizes its worth, and if our readers have not seen it we advise them to send to the International News Co. for a copy or call at the Peabody News Co. for it.

We are in receipt of the June number of the MUSICAL HERALD, which is as, usual, bright and instructive. Music and the healing art is discussed—a review from a high standpoint of the recent concerts in Boston is given, and the miscellany is worthy of the notice of all musical people. The music of the number is a sacred quartette, beginning with a flue duet for Soprano or Tenor and Alto, "When the Evening Shadows Fall," Song, "The Starlets" by Fesca, and the Andante from Schubert's Symphonic in C. Price 15 cents. $1.50 per year. Musical Herald Co., Boston.

The July number of FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE affords the most interesting and entertaining reading. In literary and artistic merit this magazine successfully competes with the best of its contemporaries. The Rev. F. C. Ewer contributes No. VI of "Religious Denominations in the United States—What is the Anglican Church?" Those admirable papers are continued, "Among the Natives of the North," by Lieutenant Schwatka, and "The American Pilgrim in Palestine," by De Leon; "Live Churches" is a characteristic article by the Editor, Dr. Talmage, who also contributes to the Home Pulpit a sermon, "Solicitude." "A Visit to Whittier" and "Dr. Newman on Spiritualism" are among the other notable articles. There are interesting sketches, essays, serial and short stories, with poems of great merit; a varied Miscellany, together with Editorial Comments, Record of Important Events, Obituary Notices, etc., etc. A single copy is 25 cents, or $3 a year, postpaid. Address, Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55 & 57 Park Place, New York.

The June WIDE AWAKE shows a dainty frontispiece illustrating a poem "A Belated Little Maid." There are two excellent stories, "Bobette," and "Kitty's Birthday;" both stories are well illustrated. Two notable poems also appear, "Midsummer Words," and "Two Hunters," each admirably illustrated. There are other good pieces of verse, daintily humorous, in the number—"Corinne's Musicale," and "A New Letter in the Alphabet," each with its picture, "Gracie's Pin," and "An old Proverb." The serials are delightful—"Cacique John," the Yucatan story and "On Indiana Roads," while everybody will enjoy the Fourth Act of White Mountain Comedy, "More Than They Bargained For," to say nothing of the graphic picture serial, "Through Spain on Donkey-Back."

THE MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY, for June, has a continuation of Mrs. Lamb's illustrated article on "Wall Street in History." The first article related to the early colonial days, when the street really did exhibit a defensive wall; the present includes the Revolution era, and the later day when New York was the national capital, and President Washington, with footmen and outriders, rode through Wall street behind his six horses with painted hoofs. If we could have enough such historical reading as this, the sale of novels would suffer. An interesting illustrated article, with a beautiful frontispiece portrait, describes the great and highly-valuable collection of Dr. Franklin's manuscripts, which our government has recently obtained in more than 30 great bound-volumes, with many books of his or relating to him. The rest of the 88 pages are worthily filled, especially one in which Bancroft defends his latest history from some criticisms. Mrs. Lamb is making a grand thing of the Magazine. [Historical Publication Soc., N. Y.; $5 a year.]

"LINDSAY'S LUCK," a Love Story, by Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, author of "That Lass o' Lowries," has just been issued by T. B. Peterson & Brothers, Philadelphia. It is one of the earlier and best productions of the pen of an author who has been famous since this well-written novel first appeared as a serial in the pages of Peterson's Magazine. The freshness of the young writer's imagination, her crisp style, her concise diction that first attracted the discriminating attention of the ripe judgment of the publisher of Peterson's Magazine, appear at their best in the chapters of "Lindsay's Luck." That her earlier love stories are among her best may be seen in these pages, or those of "Kathleen," "Theo," "Miss Crespigny," "Pretty Polly Pemberton," "A Quiet Life," and "Jarl's Daughter," published by T. B. Peterson & Brothers, in uniform style with "Lindsay's Luck." Mrs. Burnett's love stories are unexceptionally good reading, being as pure as they are interesting. "Lindsay's Luck," and the six other love stories by Mrs. Burnett are published in large square duodecimo volumes, bound in paper cover, price fifty cents each, and will be found for sale by all Booksellers, by all News Agents everywhere, and on all Railroad Trains, or copies will be sent to any one, to any place, at once, postpaid, on remitting the price of ones wanted, in a letter to the Publishers, T. B. Peterson & Brothers, Philadelphia, Pa

TALMAGE ON HUSKING.

EARS OF CORN THAT DON'T MIND IT, AND OTHERS THAT DO.

"My hearers," shouted Rev. Dr. Talmage from his pulpit in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, on a bright Sunday morning last November, "going at the rate of forty miles an hour last Wednesday, I got this sermon on husking God has arranged that the ear and the husk shall be parted. Every rheumatic pain is but a thrust of the husking-peg: every neuralgic twinge is only a twist of the husker. Thus he takes away what hinders your soul's liberation."

Poetry is permitted to preachers; but the fact is, nobody wants to be husked nor does any one believe that the body is to the soul what the husk is to the corn. On the other hand, Nature teaches us to fight this husking process. Hence most people are thankful for whatever can abate those "rheumatic pains" and "neuralgic twinges."

That, at least, was the view taken of the subject by M. Alfred Baer, a French gentleman, who, at his pleasant home, Greenmont, near Sing Sing, N. Y., said, the other day, to a reporter:

"My life has at times been rendered almost intolerable by Rheumatism. I had tried different remedies without result. But PARKER'S GINGER TONIC gave me great satisfaction. You may tell Messieurs Hiscox & Co., of New York—the proprietors—that I certify to its perfect efficacy, as the Tonic has completely restored my health. Please say, also, that they are welcome to use my name, and ask them to accept my thanks," added the courteous Parisian.

Rheumatism is a symptom of kidney disease, not an affection of the joints or muscles. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC purifies the Blood, and acts with a success beyond that of all other preparations in cases of Dyspepsia, Liver, Kidney and Stomach disorders, and in common Coughs and Colds. Prices, 50 cents and $1 per bottle. The latter the more economical.

Macullar, Parker & Co., publish a pocket atlas, which is really a valuable thing. It contains not only a map of the United States, and of every State in the Union separately, but has in a condensed form laws of business, taxes governing commercial travellers, value of coins, postal regulations and calendars. It is worthy a place in any pocket, and will be cherished as a treasure by those who are fortunate enough to obtain one through this enterprising firm of Boston.

Most of the so-called foreign lager sold in this country is said to be made here. The demand is of comparatively recent growth. A shrewd importer, noting the success which attended the importation of English ales for draught consumption, saw a chance for German beer. He imported a few barrels. They sold for three times the price per glass of native beer. He sent for a larger cargo, and the importation became a regular thing. Large brewers control the bottling trade. When they found foreign beer competing with their own, they demanded the right to import foreign beer and supply it to the bottler. The bottler, in debt and under contract to them, could not refuse this. Then the American manufacture of "foreign" beer began. This manufacture is one of the most closely guarded secrets of the brewing business. The compounding and coloring of the beer are in the hands of the proprietors and a few confidential employes.

In anticipation of the repeal of the stamp act, the size of the bottle containing the celebrated Simmons' Liver Regulator has been materially increased so that for $1 the quantity of the medicine will be greater than heretofore. Ask your druggist for, and be sure you get the big bottle of Simmons' Liver Regulator.

In a few days a remarkable transformation will take place in summer resorts. Boarding-houses will have only choice rooms. The scenery will invariably be fine. The mosquitoes will disappear. Malaria will go to the next town. The company in each hotel will be "select." Fog will stop a few miles away. The surf will begin to roll in at least three feet higher. The undertow will cease working. The music of the attending orchestra will be charming. In short, the disagreeable features which render other places undesirable will be happily wanting in the given resort at which you apply for entertainment during the summer.—Boston Advertiser.

RESCUED FROM AGONIZING DEATH.—New York.—Mr. James White, 1552 Broadway, formerly chief instructor in Dickels' Riding School, in this city, said to a newspaper reporter: "I broke my shoulder, arm and elbow, splitting the socket in four parts. Rheumatism set in and I employed the best physician. He tried everything, but I grew worse, and at last said: 'I have one more thing to try and if that fails nothing can give you relief, and that is St. Jacobs Oil.' I used this great pain-reliever, and am able to use my arm, free from all rheumatic trouble. I have also recommended the remedy to a number of people, and in every case they have been speedily and effectually cured."

The ability to keep a hotel is possessed by few people, although many attempt to prove that they are in the class. Somehow the man who really can keep a hotel has favors heaped upon him. Not only is he popular with men but Nature aids him. Does he arrange for a great spectacle in front of his piazza, and thousands flock to behold the show, then cometh the rain and spoileth the fireworks so that the crowd must come again, or the gentle zephyr raiseth the white cap upon the waves so that he who would see the race must come again or not witness the race. Rains may come and winds may blow but the landlord makes his money.—Lynn Item.

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is

HEYLINGBERG'S

EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.
Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.
Mr. J. J. Heylingberg. Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,
FRANK A. BRAGDON.
Many more testimonials furnished if desired.
Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

TERRIBLE SUFFERING.

KIDNEY AND BLADDER COMPLAINTS OF MANY YEARS DURATION—HIS WORD GOOD AS GOLD—CASE OF CITY ASSESSOR FRANCIS GOMARD, 89 SUMNER STREET, LOWELL, MASS.

"His word is as good as a bank note at any bank in Lowell, and I know it," was the opinion of a well known citizen in speaking of City Assessor Francis Gomard. Your reporter found Mr. Gomard at his pleasant home, which, with many others, adorns Sumner street and fronts the charming park of South Common. Mr. Gomard said, "I had been, as many of my friends in Lowell know, a great sufferer from kidney and urinary troubles for a long time. My physician said it was the result of diseased kidneys and enlargement of the prostate gland. I had suffered terribly, and although my doctor's treatment had been the best which this city afforded, I got no better. I said finally, 'Doctor, it's no use. You have done all that is in your power to do, I know that; but I must get help from some other source or die.' Finally I was induced to try Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, a medicine which had been recommended very highly for kidney diseases. I received help at once. It has acted like a charm with me. Why so? Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is an honest preparation, and I know it. I didn't think anything would help me, but this has given me better health than any medicine ever prescribed for me. I have recommended it to ever so many of my friends in the city of Lowell, and with the same result. They think there is nothing like Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY."

What Mr. Gomard says can be depended upon, as any one acquainted with the gentleman knows.

Dramatic and Musical.

The third production at the Bijou Theatre is Gilbert and Sullivan's "Sorcerer," which was brought out Monday. Besides Harry Dixey, Miss Edmondson, Mr. Fessenden and other favorites of the company who have gained in "Iolanthe" and "Pounce & Co," so many laurels, the management has engaged especially Mr. Digby V. Bell and Miss Lizzie Burton for important roles. For the first time in this country Sullivan's original orchestration will be heard. The production of "The Sorcerer," is in keeping with the reputation of the Bijou. From the smock frocks of the bold peasantry up to the scarlet cloaks of the representatives of the upper classes, all the costumes have been expressly imported, so that "The Sorcerer" is given with a realistic effect never before attempted.

"Ranch 10," a drama of life and love in the West, is presented at the Boston Theatre this week, with Mr. Harry Meredith in the dual role of Al, and Tom McClelland, supported by a specially chosen company. The plot is exciting, the situations are said to be extremely effective, and the drama comes to the Hub with the prestige of a successful season's tour. Prices during Mr. Meredith's engagement are to be on a very popular scale.

Agnes Booth, who is passing the summer at Masconomo, has been re engaged for two seasons by the Madison Square management.

IT PAYS TO ADVERTISE.—The most conspicuous success in New York in the dry goods trade in the last year has been that of E. J. Denning & Co.—This young firm has in a short time rebuilt and extended the old retail business of A. T. Stewart & Co., and is today doing a much larger out-of-town retail business than A. T. Stewart ever did. While they have gone up, one or two other firms, far more noted two or three years ago, have been gradually sinking. Those firms stopped advertising; E. J. Denning & Co. have just been advertising more lavishly and judiciously than has been the custom of almost any other dry goods firm in New York. While other firms are complaining of dull times, they are extending their reputation and trade, and furnishing another practical demonstration of the business axiom that, other things being equal, the greatest publicity means the greatest prosperity.

The irrepressible Raymond, 240 Washington street, Boston, announces five grand summer excursions for July, of from five to eleven days each, the expense ranging from $30 to $65, the trips including nearly every point of interest in New England, New York and Canada. These trips have the advantage of relieving the tourist of all trouble in the way of trains, hotel accommodations, etc., every want being studied and provided for in advance, an efficient conductor and assistants accompanying each party, while the very best accommodations are engaged, both en route and at hotels. Programmes giving full information may be procured free by return mail, by addressing W. Raymond, 240 Washington street, Boston.

In the last North American Review a clergyman, an actor, a manager, and a dramatic critic, discuss the theatre question. It is somewhat noticeable that the clergyman is the most unfair in his criticisms, making prejudiced and untrue statements. On the other hand, the friends of the theatre are sternly impartial in their opinions, criticising severely where criticism is due, but bestowing discriminating praise.—The pulpit cannot maintain its influence by such exaggerated, overdrawn, unfair methods. Candor and frankness are indispensible to those who would convince others.—Southbridge Journal.

"Have you read Mr. Whittier's poem, 'How the Women went from Dover?'" enquired one recently of a prominent personage at Dover, who seemed deeply engrossed in his own thoughts. "No, I haven't," was the reply; "which way did they go—Boston & Maine or Eastern?" There are some people who are not given to poetic appreciation.—Portsmouth Gazette.

Last Thursday afternoon Mr. Aionzo Goodhue rowed a lady who had passed the age of four-score from Beverly to Salem Willows in a dory. This was the first time the lady had visited that spot in sixty-two years, it being at that time a wilderness compared with its present state.—Beverly Citizen.

One of our exchanges wants to know why the weeklies of the State are so particular about the "full moon" as the basis of an item. A full moon occurs only once in four weeks, while full men occur so often that they are served up in bunches under the district court record every week.—Palmer Journal.

"Well," said the lady whose husband had run away with the school ma'am "there's one consolation; I know the inside facts of this scandal and that's more than those spiteful old maids across the way know of it."

One of our citizens, 72 years of age, visits Boston to-day, for the first time.—Fairhaven Star.

HEAD OF CENTRAL.

An interesting temperance meeting was held in the South Congregational church last Sabbath evening, which was addressed by Neal Dow, of Portland, Maine. All the clergymen of the town were on the platform and took part in the exercises, the familiar face of Rev. L. L. Wood being an interesting feature, from this gentleman's well known advocacy of the temperance cause. The exercises opened with an anthem by the new Chorus Choir of that church, the scriptures were read by Rev. Mr. Sprague, prayer was offered by Rev. Mr. Smith, a hymn was given out by Rev. Mr. Hudson, in the singing of which the congregation joined, after which Mr. Dow was happily introduced by Rev. Mr. Sperry. Mr. Dow in opening referred to the liquor element as great and prosperous, to its large capital and enormous expenditures, to its many rich men and the extensive amount of property controlled by its proprietors and supporters. It was therefore consistent that the opponents of this traffic should justify their action. His reply was, that it was inconsistent with the general good—and that was answer enough.—It wages deadly war upon the nation and state. As the liquor trade prospers every other branch languishes and dies. That was answer enough. Reference was then made to language by which the rum trade was characterized by Gladstone, by Wesley, by old Dr. Beecher, and by Senator Morrill, who called it the gigantic crime of crimes. He was not aware that any one had denied this from the time of Wesley down to the present.

Mr. Dow could not understand how it was that our grog shops are licensed. All sources of misery are not to be compared to this evil. All the elements of good are on one side—of evil on the other. On the one side is set the Lord's servants, on the other the devil's. There would be no licensing if the Lord's servants did not go over to the enemy. The Lord's side can only be beaten by treachery. If His followers were half as faithful as the devil's servants it would win every time. Mr. Dow here related a conversation he recently had with a clergyman who was in favor of license—bringing into prominence the two opposite theories. He referred to the fact that in Peabody, in every place where licenses are granted, the licensees are violating the law all the time. As a matter of fact, in every place license means free rum. He wondered that there could be any mistaken on this point. His position was no license, because it is a sin against God. It was the position of the Anti-Slavery men—the old fight over again.

He proposed to wage war against it and put it under the ban. He referred to articles in the New York Tribune claiming that prohibition was a failure, and that it meant in Maine free rum. Mr. Dow said it was not true. There is no place where prohibition has not diminished the volume of liquor traffic. In Portland there were three sheriff's officers with nothing to do but to watch the rumsellers. Mr. Dow here referred to the history of the Maine law. In 1851, when the law first went into force the great object of its advocates was to redeem the people from the evil. The rum interest was an important one. Vast quantities of it were consumed. The profits of all the vast industries of the State were consumed in rum, and pauperism was the result. It could all be traced back to grog shops. The question was, how could this be remedied. The law must be changed—and in order to do this, public opinion must be changed. The advocates of the new law went through the state, and as a result party affiliations were laid aside and they said "Heaven helping us we will put the grog shops down, and everything else that stood in the way." And they did. Now there is not a distillery or a brewery, where formerly it was a large business. There is no Jamaica rum brought in vessels by way of trade, as formerly. All that is brought in is concealed and smuggled in—marked eggs or "glass, this side up with care." The whole condition of Maine is changed. It could no longer be recognized as the same state. When they first went among the people, before the Maine law, they saw old dilapidated farms, broken gates and fences, in abundance. Now everything is different, the barns are better painted than the houses were then, and everywhere is evidence of thrift and prosperity. Farms that were mortgaged to the liquor sellers are now owned free and clear by the people. In the old rum time, Maine was the poorest state in the Union. There were no savings banks. Now there is an abundance of them—supported by the laboring people. More than twelve millions of dollars a year is saved to the state of Maine. The result is prosperity. Prohibition is the way to do it. License is not the way. He admitted that liquor was sold in Maine, but the volume of business has been reduced to one-twentieth of its former proportions. Is not that a success? Mr. Dow closed by saying that it was a shame to Peabody that her grog shops should be licensed, that she should allow the liquor interest to go into her homes and take fathers and brothers and make them drunkards. He had come to the conclusion that if any intelligent man would vote for license he had not the love of God in his heart. They must make no mistake. There is no neutral ground. One tries to help God and his fellow man, the other the gambler and those who represent this vile and wicked traffic. Yet the latter win. Why? Because many professed servants of God go over and help them. Every man who votes for license is responsible for the whole of the misery resulting from the sale of liquor, because it comes as a result of his vote. At the close of Mr. Dow's remarks, a hymn was given out by Rev. Mr. Wood, after singing which the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Mr. Sperry.

The Concert of War Songs in Boston has had the effect to revive these melodies among the survivors of the battles of the rebellion. They have been sung in many other cities and towns in the State, and last Wednesday evening such a programme was presented in the Peabody Institute by a committee from Union Post 50. Arrangements had been made for a chorus of male voices, to be composed of our best singers, which was successfully carried out.—The Salem Brass Band, a drum corps and several female soloists, had also been engaged to add to the general effect. As was anticipated a large number of our citizens were present. Had the evening been pleasant we think there would have been no vacant seats. The concert was interesting and in conformity with the programmes which have been given in other places. The music of the war was of two kinds.—There were pieces which were familiar to the soldiers themselves—sung by them around the camp fires, cheering their lonely hours and reminding them of other days. Such was "Tenting to-night," and others of that class.—There was also much music, the outgrowth of the war, from which the wives and mothers of these soldiers gained inspiration at home to endure the enforced absence of their loved ones. These melodies did not at once reach the field of battle. The young men and maidens of to-day can scarcely realize with what dimmed eyes, with what anxious hearts, these ballads, simple in refrain, but cheering in sentiment, were caught up everywhere.—Every song was a war song. And to those living to-day who passed through these events, the songs of this latter class bring home more tender recollections than those which the boys at the front loved to sing. In these concerts both classes of songs are incorporated. There are also brought out songs of a patriotic character,—popular before the rebellion broke out, and which are in no sense the music of the war. Such are the Red, White and Blue, and Star Spangled Banner.

A concert of this nature is instructive to those who can but faintly recall the teims which called forth the songs. No other event could have drawn so large an audience to the Institute on such a sultry evening. And that they waited patiently through a programme of nearly three hours in length was another indication of the interest manifested, and was a cheering proof of the success of the entertainment. And that it was a success is beyond peradventure. The large chorus of male singers, many of them good soloists themselves, made the hall ring with the melodies. Most of these war songs have a solo as well as chorus, and to the male voices of the company, assisted by Comrade LeGrande, of Salem, and others, was assigned this pleasant duty. All were done well, the vim and clear elocution of LeGrande in "Kingdom Coming" being worthy of especial praise. Young's Quartette of male voices, of Salem, with Mr. Young himself as accompanist, gave several selections, which were well received, the best being "The Vacant Chair."—There was also a quartette of mixed voices, consisting of Mrs. J. P. Fernald, Mrs. F. C. Ferguson, Messrs. Goldthwait and Littlefield, who rendered Keller's American Hymn, Mrs. Fernald singing the solo part. The Star Spangled Banner is naturally one of the most effective pieces at these concerts, and Miss Nellie E. Boyle, of Salem, whose voice is not unfamiliar to a Peabody audience, had been engaged to render the solo. Miss Boyle brought to her work a vigorous and excellent style of vocalization, and showed the results of the careful training which she is receiving under the instruction of L. W. Wheeler, of Boston. She was heartily encored, and gave in response Millard's "Viva L'America," in which selection she was unfortunate in taking the tempo too fast. Miss Edith Randall, of Quincy, sang the solo in Red, White and Blue. Miss Randall has had much experience as a public singer, and at once gained the favor of the audience. Her voice is flexible and of good compass, and this solo displayed its qualities to good advantage. She was encored and gave "Old Folks at Home." Mrs. R. J. Chute, of Melrose, formerly of this town, sang "The Sword of Bunker Hill," which could hardly be called a war song, but which was not unsatisfactory to the audience. The song of Miss Agnes Grosvenor, being the alternate lines of "When Johnnie comes Marching Home," created great enthusiasm, and at its close she was presented with a fine basket of flowers. About twenty of the numbers were calls on the bugle and by the drum corps, and the enthusiasm of those veterans who were present was much awakened by them. The band played with its accustomed spirit, a piano duet was given by Misses Isabella and May Bill, and the accompaniments of most of the soloists were played by Miss Nellie Bartlett, who is deserving of especial commendation for the good judgment displayed by her in consulting the every wish of the soloists, a faculty which every accompanist who is even a good pianist, does not possess.—Taken as a whole, the concert gave evident satisfaction, and the managers are entitled to much praise in giving our people so excellent an entertainment. It was also a financial success, even at the moderate price which was asked for the tickets.

Custom Department

In this department we have marked down four different styles of fine imported English cassimere suits, which we have sold for $30, $28 and $25 per suit, and consider them cheap at that, but at this sale as a special inducement we shall make suits to order for $15 per suit. Or the coat for $8.75, vest $2, pants $4. Come early if you want to secure one of the bargains, for bargains they are and no mistake. All the rest of the clothes marked down from $5 to $7 on a suit. Now is your time, gents; improve it.

Hats and Caps.

At this sale we shall offer some special bargains in this department in both fine and medium grades.

You can buy a good stiff hat of us for 75 cents, $1, 1.25, 1.50 and save you from fifty cents to a dollar on every hat. Mackinaw straws for $1, regular price $2.

Furnishing Goods.

In this department you will find a fine line of underwear, neck ties, collars, cuffs, etc., at wholesale prices.

At this Great Bargain Sale we shall confine the gift of the Waterbury Watch and Chain or Clock to customers purchasing a suit or overcoat to the amount of $15 or more.

We are obliged to confine this gift to this amount as everything we offer is a bargain, and in many cases the goods are marked below cost. Our other presents will be given as before, viz., to every purchaser of $8.00 worth of clothing a beautiful pair of Roller Skates; and with $5.00 worth of clothing we give a fine Bat and Ball.

N. B.—At this great sale we shall give the above gifts in all our numerous departments.

Poet's Corner.

Kinds Words Too Late.

Dead in her coffin—the white of her face
As pale and as cold as the pillow's deep lace.
Her hands on her bosom enfolded—clasped fast,
As tho' asking mercy e'en unto the last.

She erred and she suffered—it is well then that now
There are naught but kind looks at the wan, marble brow;
That the bad is unspoken and only good said
When, God rest her soul, it's no use, since she's dead?

Had a little been shown in the old sinful days;
If some had but bent from their self-righteous ways,
It scarce made their lives or their hearts the less fair—
But what had it been to the girl lying there?

Waiting.

Where the sunlight and the shadow
Strive throughout the day,
Happy children in the meadow
Gayly laugh and play;
Boasting one above another,
As they idly roam,
How will each surpass the other
When their ships come home!

We, who smile at childish prattle
With a stately air;
We, who fight a sterner battle
With our daily care—
Though a prudent, grave adviser
Each himself may deem—
Are we really so much wiser
Than the children seem?

Have we not, alas, how often!
Through departed days,
Watched for cold, gray skies to soften
Into golden haze?
Looking o'er life's troubled ocean,
White with angry foam;
Waiting through the day's commotion,
Till our ships come home?

Hope, that shed a fuller splendor,
O'er us as we went;
Love, that gleamed so true and tender
With a clear content;
Wealth, that might be had for winning,
Peaceful heart and brow;
These were ours at life's beginning—
Are they with us now?

Still, the children's happy laughter
Ripples in our ears;
Heedless they of what comes after,
Careless all of fears,
Youth and age are linked together,
Onward as they roam,
Waiting both through changing weather
Till their ships come home.

Original Story.

(Written for The Press.)

That Horrid Painter.

There was an unwonted excitement in the town of X., or at least in that portion of it which arrogated for itself the title of 'Society.' For there was going to be a grand ball in the new Town Hall, and the managers were taking special precautions that it should be a select affair, in the strictest sense of the word. Dancing was not to commence until half past nine; everyone must come in some kind of a carriage; no ladies would be admitted, unless they wore ten button, smashed raspberry kids, and had their hair done up in the figure eight, while the gentlemen would be denied a participation in the grand event, unless equipped in the regulation two button vest, the claw hammer coat, and skin tight coverings, for the bifurcated portion of their anatomy.

Society, as we have said, was excited. Miss Winterblossom, whose father was a judge, (of law and of little else, but who was considered the impersonation of profundity) declared it was going to be 'one of the creamest of the cream affairs.' Laura Highflyer (whom gossip said need not be so proud since her great grandfather was literally a highflyer, having been hanged) said if it came off as she anticipated, it would really seem like a foretaste of heaven. Most of the ladies who were to attend, were as a rule at ease, financially, for they would have a gentleman escort, and had a brother or father to care for the necessary bills. Among these, however, was not included Kitty Folsom. She was the daughter of a widow of small means, was an independent, sensible, pretty girl, who, according to the standard of 'Society,' had no right to expect admission to its charmed circle. But all the young men admired her, she was invaluable at charades and tableaux, was a fine musician, and consequently was recognized, despite her disqualifications, by the toniest of the town. With her it was a struggle to appear in proper array, but good taste, a contented spirit, and the knack which women possess of making old clothes look as well as new, combined at last to make her feel that she would be creditably dressed, and that she need not fear for her appearance. Among the young men who were desirous of attending, there was more eager anticipation than among the fairer participants.

There was Johnnie Lightfeather, a very sweet youth; Tom Hudson, rich but sensible; Algernon Fitz Hugh De Vere, who was perfect as a waltzer, but being an invalid could not work; Bill Jackson, who was an expert at billiards, whose father had been a cobbler, but who now killed time in the grandest house in the place; James Sinclair, who was supposed to be somebody, because one of his relations had been an alderman; and in addition there would be some of the lesser social satellites of the place. So that the affair was really to be a solid gathering, with only a suspicion of veneering. But when the list had been once determined, there was a solemn vow taken by the managers to admit no one else, without the strongest credentials as regards wealth and social position. The chief manager, or if the word be permissible, manageress, was Lily Langtry Scraggs, and it was agreed, to make assurance doubly sure, that no one else should come without her approval. As the eventful time drew near, Miss Kitty was in a quandary. The young gentleman, whose invitation she had accepted was sick with the aristocratic disease 'tonsilitis,' and she had almost made up her mind that she was to be disappointed. But on the very afternoon of the great day, while gazing abstractedly from the window of the little front room, the landlord of the great hotel, which was full in summer-of human butterflies, approached with a young gentleman whom he introduced as a particular friend. The landlord was a great admirer of his young friend Kitty, and in many ways was of service to her. A brief conversation revealed to her that the young man was a perfect gentleman, of cultivation, an experienced traveller and she was much impressed in his favor. But when after it had been disclosed that she was in a predicament about attending the great party, he asked her permission to escort her, begging pardon for presuming upon so brief an acquaintance, she was in much doubt. Her friend the landlord, in whom she had implicit confidence, assured her of the respectability of the young man, whom he had called Mr. Howard, and after a little demurring accepted, although she was obliged to make it conditional upon the approval of Miss Scraggs. This latter lady was at first peremptory in her refusal, but finally summoned a council of ladies, who after some debate appointed a committee to wait upon him and state the position of affairs candidly and then report. The committee consisting of four young ladies, wended their way toward the hotel, but their courage oozed away as they drew near, and they were glad when they found they could get a good look at the young man, without his seeing them. One sight of his bright, cheery countenance, of his exquisite moustache, of the irreproachable cut of his garments, convinced them, and they reported favorably. Eight o'clock came and from that time on, the town was lively with carriages flitting hither and thither.

The hall brilliantly lighted, was soon more brilliant with the happy faces of ecstatic young ladies, set in relief by the distressed young men, especially those in hired suits. As the company increased and mental votes were taken it was decided that 'society' was to have a social triumph. The young ladies puckered and primped, the young men waited and wiggled, the instruments began to growl as though a detachment of cats were present, and all was ready. 'Music arose with its voluptuous swell' and the grand march began. Miss Kitty and her escort were the observed of all observers, for the young men involuntarily declared her the handsomest lady, while the other sex was, with the exception we shall note, unanimous that her escort was the finest looking gentleman. Despite this hearty admiration however, the selectest portion of this select party, had not admitted him to its favor. The young men who were clinging to the outer verge of 'society' and the young ladies who were having too good a time to be burdened with toploftiness, were satisfied that he was splendid, but Miss Scraggs and her little coterie were not going to be too 'pronouncee' as they said until they knew more about him. They tried everyway to avoid him but when Kitty, whom they really liked, with perfect sang froid, despite the fact that she perfectly understood their feelings, brought him to them to introduce him, they had to recognize him although they did so with much frigidity. In the course of the evening the horrid fact was disclosed that the gentleman was nothing but a painter, and after that the cut direct was given him by many, although candor compels me to state, that none of the sweetest girls were thus guilty.

Miss Scraggs who had been waiting a great many years for a prince from Europe to come and woo her, was disgusted, her peace of mind was destroyed, the escutcheon of 'society' was tarnished, the party was a failure, the illusion was over, and so she and her select circle of admirers left the party to its fate. Undisturbed, however, by these manifestations of disapproval, Miss Kitty and the others thoroughly enjoyed themselves, and the party was continued to its appointed end. The fiddle was bagged, the lights were out, the rumble of the last coach had died away, and callow youths were wrestling out of their unaccustomed dignity, and giddy maiden's brains were whirling in a vain endeavor to sleep. Time passed and the stranger was almost forgotten by most of the party, and remembered with feelings of repulsion by the Scraggy element. But he was ever present in Miss Kitty's thoughts. By some strange infatuation he called again and again to see her and after he left report said, that she was constantly receiving letters from New York. As Kitty kept her own counsel, these matters were all hearsay, and no one could positively' tell exactly how much truth there was in these reports. The breach between the 'Scraggies,' as they had been called, and the more ignoble portion of 'society' had gradually been healed, and the town was serene again.

Another event occurred which put everybody on the qui vive, and that was, that the celebrated artist, Fitzsimmons, who had attained great celebrity in Europe, who had been honored with receptions by Queen Victoria and King Cetawayo, and whose pictures had created almost a revolution in art, was to board that summer at the hotel, and the landlord had issued invitations to meet him there. Miss Scraggs prepared to conquer, for to bring this famous artist to her feet would compensate for all the past years of disappointment. In dreams he wooed and won her consent. In dreams she saw a brilliant wedding; in dreams she left with him for New York, there to enter upon a great social career. How all the girls would turn green with envy. How she would look down on that little Kitty Folsom. She waited until long after the hour, that she might make a sensation, and when the usher announced in loud tones, Miss Araminta Scraggs of Scragg Hall, she swept into the drawing room of the hotel, with (in imagination) the dignity of Juno and the grace of Venus. She glanced around for the hero of the evening, but failed to see any stranger. She had heard remarks made that Kitty and her betrothed were to be there, and had made up her mind to avoid them for she felt sure from what had been rumored about town, that he was none other than that horrid painter, who had destroyed the felicity of their so carefully guarded assembly. What was her surprise, her rage, her mortification, when leaning on the arm of the landlord she was brought, almost without knowing it, face to face with Kitty and her escort and the landlord in his most genial tones said 'I take great pleasure in making you two acquainted, Mr. Howard Fitzsimmons, Miss Scraggs.' Miss Scraggs gave one look, one screech, one kick, and fainted. Her dreams had been so brilliant and to be thus dispelled, her hopes so radiant and to be thus blasted. After great exertion she came to her senses, and bewildered and crushed she left the assembly. It was a long while before she got out again and she never after ventured to appear as a leader in 'Society.' She became Secretary of the Woman's Rights Association, corresponding member of the New Zealand Missionary Society, Director of a club for furnishing red flannel night gowns to the children in Africa, and in many ways showed a spirit of determination to atone for the life of frivolity she had hitherto lived. Miss Kitty soon became Mrs. Fitzsimmons, and realized all the dreams which had been so rudely dispelled for Miss Scraggs. But to her credit, be it said, that she never ceased to be the same unassuming, charming lady, which she was when she attracted the notice of that horrid painter.

Children's Sunday at the Methodist Church.

Last Sunday was Children's Sunday at the Methodist church and was pleasantly observed. A large audience was in attendance. The platform, the pulpit and the space in front of the organ was handsomely and artistically decorated with the choice flowers of the season, interspersed with evergreens, making a gorgeous display; on the right was an elegant anchor of beautiful flowers, and on the left was a large cross of white flowers; the centre piece was a crown with a large white cross of flowers, in relief, in front. Rev. C. N. Smith, after prayer and singing, introduced Dr. Crowell of Lynn, whose remarks were in substance as follows:

He had always felt a great interest in the children. A few days ago he went to visit the State Prison at Concord, where he saw Warden Usher, who had been formerly associated with the present pastor of this church, Mr. Smith, and heard Brother Barnes preach to seven hundred convicts, which was a larger congregation than the one before him now. While there, as it was visiting day, his attention was called to one of the prisoners, quite a young man, who was undergoing a life sentence for the murder of his half-brother. He had then been in prison between three or four years; a young lady was talking with him, who was a friend of his mother, and had come to see him in place of her. Being in Salem one day, went into a grocery store, saw a young man in there judged him to be about eighteen years of age, who was very drunk, and feeling a pity for him, I asked him why he did so. He said that his mother that very morning had begged him not to go to Salem, for she feared that he might get into trouble, and left his mother crying at the door; and this was the result of disobedience, — how very important that all should have religious training when in early life. Had these two young men given their hearts to Jesus when young, one would not now be in prison and the other in a drunkard's grave. The speaker said he had given his heart to Jesus when young, had been a Sunday School teacher, five years a local preacher and forty years an ordained minister. We have a Church, a Sunday School, a library; take all the angels, all the people in the world, yet they cannot make a single one of these beautiful flowers, only God can make these. All ministers want to make you christians when young; it is a very hard thing to convert an old sinner. There is in Peabody an old man eighty years of age who does not go to church, but walks about his garden; have tried to get him to church, but it could not be done; therefore, children, get into the habit of going to Sunday School, and you will follow it up when you are old; a boy or girl who is strict in their attendance, becomes marked in a community, and there are great hopes for them, while there is danger for those who drop off. Children, give yourselves to the Saviour, don't form bad habits, if you get religion when young your life will be happy. The path of the just is a shining light. An aged man, a doctor, once said, "Why, all my life long has been peace;" it was because he had religion when young. Was at a prayer meeting once when a little boy came in leading a blind man. He found him on the street and led him in because he thought it was the best place; this was an act of kindness. Children, learn to do acts of kindness. Don't do wrong—think of the unhappy mother whose boy is in prison. Children, don't make your mothers unhappy, or increase their gray hairs with sorrow; there is many a mother sleeping in the grave yard, brought to an untimely grave, by the bad conduct of their children.

A young man who staid out late nights, would find his poor old mother sitting up when he came home, sometimes between three and four o'clock in the morning, and he would say to her, "Why don't you go to bed?" "What is the use," she answered, "I could not sleep when I did not know where you were!" She was at last wore out by her ceaseless watching and anxiety, while he was to the theatre or some other bad place, and at last his conduct killed his mother. A family named Campbell moved from West Medway to Racine, Wis. They had four children, one died March 1st, one about March 7, and the other 12 years of age died April 1st. Just before she died, she exclaimed, "O, what a bright light! mother, I can see the angels! What a beautiful place, and I am going there, and I see my little brother and sister who have gone," and then she reached out her hands, saying, "Stephen, you take this one and Mary you take this," and died. Mother Monroe, one of the best women that ever lived, who was never known to speak a harsh word, and was a very quiet lady, when she lay on her death bed, said she saw a bright light. The attendant got up and closed the shutters, but she still said the room was brighter than day, and that all the departed saints of the Bromfield street church had come down from heaven to see her, and guide her, and so she died. O, let us live to save the children and bring them to Heaven. We must all make an effort to do this, and we shall be rewarded.

The time having been occupied Rev. Mr. Smith said he would not make any remarks at this time, as there would be abundant opportunity for him to speak in the future. When he went to Sunday School the first time he was in the bible class the question that came to him to answer, was, "Do you love God?" His teacher, who was a young convert, wept as he talked to him of Jesus and it was through his efforts that he was converted. To-night, he said, I want to arrange things as these flowers are arranged, the children in the front and the adults next and the older people in the background. Mr. Smith also said that he went to Sunday School as a scholar seven years and fourteen years as a teacher, and was absent only once, and what he is now he owes to what he learned in the Sunday School. Religion and Sunday School changes a person wonderfully.

On Sunday evening there was a very large audience present to witness the interesting exercises. The service consisted of singing by the school, recitations by some of the older ones, etc. There was an interesting responsive exercise appropriate to the occasion. The superintendent, Mr. Walter Baker, reading the question and the whole school responding. The infant class sang a selection and five young misses each with a bouquet in their hand recited several appropriate verses, and all recited the last verse together. During the exercises the pastor, Rev. C. N. Smith, was introduced and said: We greet you with pleasure, we have a field here which we are trying to cultivate. What influences are falling on these young hearts from the occasion, and what a weight and responsibility rests upon our own hearts, and we love to see this good work go on, but it can't be done without money. We want to increase our library, to purchase books to reach our little folks and we want papers to scatter among them, and we want you if the Lord will, to give us a good generous collection to-night. And I would also take this opportunity to invite all who are not members of any other Sabbath school or church, to come in and join our school. I have a bible class and I want to see it filled up. God bless you and us and bring us all finally to that better world. Mr. Walter Baker, the superintendent, closed the exercises by thanking all for their attendance and inviting all to come in and talk about God, and learn to talk about Jesus. Following his remarks the school sang "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Ananias had a very bad reputation, but it can be said to his credit that he never wrote a circus circular.—Philadelphia Chronicle.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

The forlorn and toiling country editor, with his "patent outside," and his inward hankering for broadcloth and diamonds and a fast-running yacht, should take heart from the recent disclosure that the fortune of $160,000 which Gambetta left behind him was all made from newspaper investments.

ADVANCE STEP IN DENTISTRY.—Havana, Cuba.—The most popular dentist of this city, Dr. D. Francisco Garcia, member of the Royal University, states that in all cases of troublesome neuralgia, arising from the teeth, his patrons are recommended to use St. Jacobs Oil, and the most satisfactory cures have followed. It is a specific for toothache, earache, bodily pains, and proof against household accidents.

FIFTH WEEK

— OF —

OSBORNE'S GREAT SALE

— OF THE —

CUSHMAN STOCK.

THE EXCITEMENT ON THE INCREASE!
STILL GREATER BARGAINS THIS WEEK!
ENORMOUS SALES AND UNPARALLELED SUCCESS!

In spite of the fact that business generally throughout the country, is dull, and the Retail Boot and Shoe trade in particular, there has been no abatement of the excitement caused by our sale of the Cushman stock. This is a positive proof that our advertisements are bona fide in every particular, and if customers occasionally do get disappointed by not finding an article that is wanted, they must recollect that when goods are offered at such low figures, an early inspection is advisable and necessary. In such a rushing business as we are having on this stock, it is impossible to tell exactly when a lot of goods will be sold out. The programme we have prepared this week, is by far the most attractive we have yet offered.

READ! REFLECT! PONDER!

Don't Cry Humbug! Don't be Sceptical! Examine samples, permit your Eyes' Judgment to Verify our Announcement.

One thing is certain, we intend to dispose of every dollars worth of the Cushman stock immediately, and with that end in view, shall

CUT, SLASH AND SLAUGHTER PRICES.

Nothing but the purchase of this Large Stock of Goods at about Fifty Cents on the Dollar, would warrant the prices we make. Don't get it into your head that they are old goods, for they are not. They are equally as good as any Boots and Shoes to be found.

Nobody need wear old Boots and Shoes after seeing the Great Bargains we are offering.

We are selling Ladies' Kid Quarter Lined Croquet Slippers for 45 cents, guaranteed worth 75 cents.

A lot of Ladies' Kid Button, for $1.10, worth $1.50.

A large lot of Stacy, Adams & Co. world renowned Men's Congress Button and Bals, sizes 5, 5 1-2, 6, 9 and 10, selling for $3.00, which is about half the price this line of goods is sold for throughout the country. No man wearing these sizes can afford to pass them by.

A lot of Ladies' Fine Serge Button, 16 thread, sizes 2 1-2, 3, 3 1-2, in B, C and C½ widths, for 90 cents. Worth, and we are selling the large sizes for $1.90.

A lot of Men's Nobby Styles Hand Sewed Strap Shoes, selling for $3.25, $3.50 and $4.75, which we defy you to buy elsewhere of same quality within one dollar per pair of our selling price.

A lot of Men's Hand Sewed Congress Button and Bals, selling for $3.00 and $3.50. Usual selling price on same goods, $5.00.

500 pairs Ladies' House Slippers, only 11 cents, comment is unnecessary.

Ladies' Serge Slippers selling for 23, 45 and 80 cents.

Misses' School Shoes, 85 cts., 95 cts. and $1.10. Sold elsewhere for 25 cents more per pair.

A large lot of Children's School Shoes, only 75, 85 and 95 cents, same quality cannot be bought in this city within 15 cents of these prices.

A large lot of Men's all Solid Strap Shoes, worth $1.00, selling for the absurd price of 65 cts., and precisely the same goods others sell for $1.00.

A splendid shoe in Congress, Bal, and Strap, for $1.25, price elsewhere $1.65.

CARD.

We would respectfully request all who possibly can, to make their purchases as early in the week as possible. This will make it much more agreeable to our customers and will greatly facilitate our business, as Saturday it was almost impossible to manage the immense crowds which thronged our two stores.

Book Notices.

The July number of DEMOREST'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE is certainly one of the most attractive issues of this interesting periodical. A striking feature is the plaster papier bas-relief of the head Perseus, which is not only a great novelty, but an exquisite work of art. The literary articles are of a high order of merit, among which may be mentioned the continuation of the story "Out of the World," "Social Life at Smith College," "The Rose in Song and Story," "How we Live in New York" by Jennie June, and a sketch of Elizabeth Thompson Butler, the celebrated painter of battle scenes. "Current Topics" are most ably and agreeably discussed. The July number of Demorest's Monthly Magazine should be in the possession of every one, the beautiful illustrations alone making it well worth possessing, to say nothing of the advantage it is to the household in the way of select reading and useful information.

Theodore Martin, whom the Queen of England knighted, in honor of his excellent literary work, has written a remarkably brilliant and entertaining volume on "Horace," in the well known series of "Ancient Classics for English Readers." No writer of antiquity has taken a stronger hold upon the modern mind than Horace. His wisdom is deeper than it seems, so simple, practical and direct as it is in its application. Dante ranks him next after Homer. Montaigne knows him by heart. Voltaire calls him "the best of preachers." Lord Chesterfield tells us, "When I talked my best I quoted Horace." To Wordsworth he was equally dear. And so it is; in many a pocket where it might be least expected, lies a well-thumbed Horace; and in many a devout Christian heart the maxims of the gentle, genial pagan find a place near the higher teachings of a greater master. This entire series of "Classics" is most worthy to be added to the attractions of every home. There are 27 volumes, heretofore published at $1 each, now reduced to a mere fraction of that cost. They are published by John B. Alden, 18 Vesey St., New York, who will send descriptive catalogue free, on request.

BALLOU'S MAGAZINE for July has a continuation of the popular story of the day, "The Belle of Australia," by William H. Thomes, author of "The Gold-Hunters," "The Bushrangers," and so forth. We learn that "The Belle of Australia" will be published in book form this fall by the enterprising firm of De Wolfe, Fiske & Company, Boston, who will make it an elegant volume. A large sale is expected by the publishers. Ballou's is full of good things, being one of the most entertaining magazines in the country, and and is only $1.50 per annum, postpaid, or 15 cents a copy. Published by Thomes & Talbot, 23 Hawley Street, Boston, and for sale by newsdealers. Send ten cents for a sample copy.

OUR LITTLE ONES and THE NURSERY for June has twenty very readable and instructive articles; each one beautifully illustrated, and prepared by some of the most popular writers and skillful artists. This monthly is prized by the young people for whose entertainment it is specially intended; but "children of larger growth" always like to read it.

Jeff Davis is said to be failing very fast of late. His hair is very white, and he has the appearance of a feeble, wan, bent old man. His wife, however, is a fat, hale, hearty lady, who watches over him as she would a child. When out driving she handles the ribbons, while he sits with drooping head, scarcely noticing anything unless his attention is called to it.

ORGANINA,

I wish to call attention to one of the most Unique Musical Instruments ever invented. It is a perfect little organ on which can be played 1000 different pieces.

The management is so simple that a child can play it, and the effect is so pleasing that the most musical person cannot help enjoying it.

Every household should have one, for the pleasure of hearing all the old and familiar tunes, the popular songs, all the operas, played perfectly, is worth ten times the cost of the Organina.

The Peabody Press.

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

IN accordance with our usual custom, on the week of the graduating exercises of the Peabody High School, the PRESS will not be issued until Thursday afternoon. It will contain a full report of the exercises, and will be delivered as soon as possible after that event.

THE NEW York Observer in a recent article on the sale of Booth's Theatre in New York, calls attention to the fact that it failed of the purpose for which it was reared—the presentation of the legitimate drama. "It failed," says this paper, "and the experiment of giving the classic drama was not encouraged by the public." It then goes on to speak of its decline as a decline of the moral tone of the stage, and the fact that this "classic drama" is not encouraged, is made the text for a condemnation in general terms of the theatre. This is the view which is taken by many who oppose the drama. "The plays of Shakespeare, of the older class of authors," say these people, "are rarely brought out; if so, they do not take." Let us look at this a moment. In our judgment, this very argument furnishes the best evidence in favor of the drama and of the elevation of its moral tone, that can be brought out. What is the legitimate or classic drama, so called? It is generally admitted to be the plays of Shakespeare and other authors of his time and later, in distinction from the plays of American and foreign authors which are written at the present time for special production. Now we venture the assertion without fear of contradiction, that nine-tenths of the modern plays are of higher moral tone, purer in sentiment and diction than these so called legitimate plays. Many of the passages of Shakespeare are not fit to be recited in public; the allusions of others would not be tolerated if from the pen of any other author. And yet these people talk of the decadence of the stage. An illustration of this very point is found in the recent production by the Boston Museum Company in Salem, of "School for Scandal." This is, we suppose, one of the legitimate plays. Large numbers of people attended who would scorn to be seen in the audience with the company of the Boston Theatre behind the footlights. It is one of the old plays and a very successful one, too, with this company. The selection between Lady Teazle and Sir Peter was in all the old readers for our use in school. And yet there are more vulgar innuendos, and sly allusions which were brought out with evident satisfaction by this company, than are to be found in a dozen of the modern plays. Contrast this play with those which have been brought out during the season by the company of the Boston Theatre, or Hazel Kirke and plays of that class, by the Madison Square of New York. In refinement of expression, in the lessons of the play, these latter are infinitely superior. It shows that the demand of the public is in favor of an improvement in the drama—plays in which, though vice may be portrayed in vivid colors, because it enters into so large a part of the life drama, virtue is rewarded, and the sentiments of true morality and not of licentiousness are applauded. Those who doubt that this is the case have failed utterly to watch the progress of the stage. We have seen an insinuation less pointed and pungent than many in the "School of Scandal" hissed in a very decided manner, and the actor or actress given thus to understand that it must not be repeated. The tone of the press, also, in its criticism of such performances, has done a deal of good in the expunging of much that was formerly tolerated in the play houses. William Warren is a good comedian. But he is a representative of the class of plays and the school of acting to which we refer, and which are considered by many people, as the only fitting ones to be produced. But Warren will interpolate more profane language in one evening than will be heard on the stage of the Boston Theatre in a year. And yet these same people who will visit the Boston Museum many times during a season in search of the "legitimate drama," will not be seen in the audience of the Boston Theatre. "Consistency, thou art a jewel."

AGAIN THERE comes a protest against the high pressure marking system prevalent in our schools and colleges—this time from the young lady students of Vassar College. It comes opportunely, and under conditions which will be likely to gain a hearing. For the reason that the educational advantages granted to women in the collegiate branches of study, have been persistently fought for, the warning is significant. It must have been given with hesitancy, when it was known that the opponents of advanced education among the female sex would find in it a reason for refusing the admission of women to the colleges—a point which they have anxiously sought to attain, in all the leading Universities of the country.

The strongest argument against this marking system comes from the young lady who herself has attained the valedictory rank in her class—but who declined to deliver it. She declares that the offering of prizes for stimulation, and the severe marking system, together with the large amount of superficial, unnecessary work required to receive the necessary graduation honors, is undermining the health of her classmates at the expense of real education. To pass the ordeal of a certain examination is, in many a case, merely a task of the memory, and may have no solid basis of information back of it. Usually the young lady students excel in this particular. Anything that can be memorized by them is more easily attained, than by their brother students. So that when they themselves protest against this superficialty, it is time to heed the lesson.

We have previously stated our opinion that rank at graduation, as determined by the prevalent marking system, is not in itself an estimate of true scholarship. Each year strengthens us in that conviction. Many of the students who do not take high rank in their class, according to the marks, have yet made their mark more successfully in the world, when they have entered upon life's duties. And this valedictorian at Vassar, who appears to be possessed of more than ordinary intelligence and judgment, admits, even contends that her rank is not an indication of her scholarship, but that others of her class, perhaps less gifted by nature, are fitted equally with her for the performance of the duties which each will be called upon to perform in after life. This conclusion is one which our educators will be perhaps slow to adopt, but it is one which will inevitably lead to a radical change in this system.

The following good story is told of Mr. Wm. M. Hill, Salem's popular Mayor: It is a well known fact that the mayor takes a great interest in the charitable and reformatory institutions of that city. On a recent Sunday he visited the Alms House and when an invitation was extended, he took the opportunity to speak a few words of cheer to those who were unfortunate enough to be inmates of the institution. In the course of his remarks he referred to the many gifts of God which they were permitted to enjoy, and pointing to an elegant bouquet before him spoke of the wonderful works of God in making those beautiful flowers that all might enjoy. After he had taken his seat the Superintendent complimented him upon his remarks and at the same time informed him that he was slightly in error in regard to the flowers, as they were wax and had been made by his wife. In the future the Mayor will probably use some other object to illustrate his point.

Miss L. T. Robinson, 255 Essex street, Salem, has an elegant assortment of millinery goods which she will sell at a low figure to close them out.—Just see her hundred of novelties at prices that must of necessity please all customers. Exquisite taste has been displayed in the selection of these goods, and it seems a shame to offer them at such a sacrifice.

Our lady readers will do well to visit the Parlor Shoe store of S. J. Berry & Co., No. 39 Market street, Lynn. Good, reliable goods will be found for our lady readers here at low prices. Ladies goods only, and lady attendants. Bear this in mind.

Jordan Lodge F. & A. M. will entertain delegates from Danvers, Salem, and vicinity, this evening.

SO. PEABODY.—Mr. T. P. Murray has had an awning put on his horse car office on Lynn St.

On a lot on Lynnfield street last Saturday, several lads ranging from eight to thirteen years of age, were giving an acrobatic performance under a tent, improvised out of hay caps. An admission fee of one cent was collected at the entrance. It turned out that the material of which the canopy was constructed had been stolen from a field near by, and the sudden appearance of the owner caused the circus to be disbanded and the performers to leave hurriedly.

Joseph Twiss, who escaped from the insane asylum at Danvers, last week, has been captured by officers Barnabee and Peasley, and returned to that Institution.

Master Arthur Brown has built and placed a boat in Cedar pond for fishing purposes.

Mr. Mayhew S. Clark is building an addition 31x36 to the stable of J. B. Thomas, on Oak street.

Warren Shaw has made extensive improvements in and around the store occupied by Wm. E. Reed.

The timid little lady who actually screams when a mouse runs toward her, can yet wear hose adorned with little bugs chasing each other over the instep, up the ankle, and still racing one after the other. She smiles at the unique design so true to nature.

Some one turned the boom of the derrick on Washington street, across the horse railroad track last Saturday night. If it had been a dark night a serious accident could not have been averted.

Mrs. Mary Galeucia died quite suddenly last Monday at the Alms House.

Wallace Galeucia is having a large barn built for him on County street.

While workmen were at work at Spring pond on the improvements there a genuine mineral, boiling spring was discovered. The waters were highly impregnated with iron and sulphur and there is said to have been a large supply. This will be turned in with the rest of the water that is received by the high service.

Complaint is made of boys bathing in the different ponds, exposed to public view from the horse cars in this part of the town. Such exposure is a violation of law.

Mr. Lewis Brown, administrator of the estate of Betsey Bowers, situated on County street, will sell the same at public auction on Saturday next at 2 o'clock in the afternoon. This is very desirable properly, and any one who wishes to secure a home, at a reasonable price, should attend the sale.

WEST PEABODY.— Mr. Joseph Kimball, A. M., of Andover, a former teacher in Phillips Academy, was ordained as an evangelist at South Lynnfield on Friday evening last. The public exercises, which were of special interest, were as follows: After singing and the reading of the minutes, invocation and reading of the Scriptures by Rev. G. E. Allen of North Reading, sermon by Rev. W. G. Sperry of Peabody, the Moderator; ordaining and installing prayer by Rev. D. N. Beach of Wakefield, charge to the pastor by Rev. F. S. Adams of Reading, the Scribe; right hand of fellowship by Rev. J. W. Colwell of South Peabody, charge to the people by Rev. C. B. Rice of Danvers Centre. The anthems for the occasion were rendered with happy effect by a select choir from the place and Lynnfield Centre. There was a choice display of flowers at the church, and abundant entertainment for guests was furnished by the people.

The strawberry festival at the hall last Wednesday evening was a very flattering success and was much enjoyed by the large number in attendance. Great credit is due the committee having the matter in charge. A neat sum was netted the ladies society.

Hon. Chas. P. Thompson will deliver the address before the Essex Agricultural Society next September.

A butcher's steel, two knives and a scale, were stolen from the cart of a Lynnfield butcher, on Tremont street, last Wednesday. They had been used during the forenoon and were not missed until he reached home.

The boiler and engine formerly used in the Winona Mills, West Peabody, have been shipped to Keene, N. H., by Mr. King Upton, where they will be used in a glue factory.

NORTH PEABODY.—Mr. R. H. Wilson has had his house repainted by Mr. Edward Price, and it makes a much improved appearance.

Mr. Henry Stentiford has removed his family to the house of Elijah Wilson.

The canker worms have committed fearful ravages in this part of the town.

The crops are doing finely, especially potatoes and grass.

The Felton school held a picnic at Jacobs' Grove recently.

A very pleasant surprise was given at the house of Mr. A. S. Blake last Monday night, by a High School Club of Salem. After enjoying themselves to a late hour, they returned home in one of Quint's barges, well pleased with their visit.

We regret to learn of the illness of Mr. Thomas O'Brine. z.

Rev. Mr. Sprague exchanged last Sabbath with Rev. Mr. Woodbridge, of North Adams.

The advance advertising wagon of Forepaugh's circus passed through town last Friday.

The brook crossing the square got stopped up yesterday, and was cleared by the board of health.

The Firemens' Relief Association will hold a special meeting at Temperance hall next Friday evening.

The materials for a large smoke stack to be used at the Geo. Upton glue factory arrived in town last Thursday.

Mr. J. Arthur Trask has just finished setting a boiler for Mr. Patrick Eagan, of Salem, and J. E. Clement & Co. have put in a new engine at the same place.

Lewis R. Power advertises a job lot of Straw hats in this weeks PRESS, among which are some Manilla hats at 75 cts. This is worth looking into, gentlemen.

Salem officers were in town last Friday, inquiring after a young girl that had been lost, strayed or stolen from that city. It was learned that she slept in the grove on the night before.

An elegant line of summer goods especially for the hot weather can be found at the store of William R. Weeks, 185 Essex St., Salem. Read his new advertisement on the second page.

Our readers will find interesting local news on every page of the PRESS this week. Notwithstanding our large advertising patronage, we are giving our readers more original matter than ever before.

We have received cards of invitation to the re-union of the State Normal School, Salem, to-morrow evening, and to the reception to be given by the graduating class of the Peabody High School, next Thursday evening, for which we extend thanks.

A detachment of Salem and Peabody police visited the residence of James Mulvaney, on Shillaber street, last Wednesday evening, and seized two barrels of beer and a quantity of hard liquor. The saloons of Daniel Hogan and Martin Brophy were also visited but no liquor was found.

Next Sunday will be observed as Children's Sunday at the Universalist church. The children of the Sabbath School will occupy seats at the service in the church in the morning, and a sermon will be preached to them by the pastor. It is expected also, that several children will be christened.

That man, with the broad brimmed hat, who dashed through town on Friday afternoon, was not one of General Crook's outriders. Despite his martial air it was one of our most peaceful citizens, our genial friend Ames, returning on his Indian steed from his western trip. We hope all who go from us to the west will as worthily represent us as we feel he can.

A large number of Peabody people visited Danvers last Monday to witness the game of baseball between the Egglestons of Boston and the Danvers nine. This latter club is considered a very strong team, as it contains Hawks, formerly of the Troys, Caskin, of the Metropolitans, and Samuel W. King, of this town, of the Live Oaks.

Boarding-house keepers are to be better protected against beats, by a law going into effect June 16th, by which a person obtaining food or lodging without an express provision for trust, and leaving without payment, is liable to a fine not exceeding $100, or imprisonment for three months in the house of correction.

Mr. Robert G. Buxton left for West Boylston last week to convey a piano to the residence of Rev. Mr. Wood.—Having delivered his load he started for home, when, a short distance from West Boylston, a rare sight met his eyes. Lying in the middle of the road were some seventy-five turtles of different sizes. He took a number of them in his hands, but let them go again with the exception of one, which he brought home with him. This turtle is evidently aged, for on its shell cut with a knife was the name of W. H. Hill, 1864. How these turtles came there is unknown.

A lively runaway occurred on the square yesterday afternoon. A pair of horses belonging to J. B. Thomas, while backed up to a car on Railroad Avenue, became frightened by the cars and started and run. As they crossed the square a number of attempts were made to stop them; a horse car driver made a dash for their heads, but his foot caught in the reins and he was thrown to the ground. The horses proceeded up Foster street, but had not gone far when Mr. H. C. Wilson, the hackman, was seen climbing into the rear of the wagon and on to the seat. Grasping the reins he brought them to a standstill and drove them back to the driver. This makes five runaway horses stopped by Mr. Wilson the past six months.

Our Nine.

From store, bank and shop they went,
A bold and fearless crew;
To take a little holiday,
Upon the ocean blue.

Without the skipper and the cook,
They numbered just nine souls,
These jolly tars from Peabody,
Bound for the Isle of Shoals.

They felt like sons of Neptune,
As the vessel's deck they trod,
And, in their mind, they captured
A wealth of perch and cod.

When out from Salem Harbor,
Two hours, or may be more,
They felt a kind of hankering,
To get on solid shore.

So in Gloucester Harbor,
They cast their anchor down,
And took a stroll all round about
This rather ancient town.

They mutually concluded,
'Twould be better a "d—d sight,"
To lay by until morning,
Than to stop out all night.

So when on the next morning,
Arose the orb of day,
They warily proceeded,
To proceed upon their way.

But as they dashed upon the waves,
With white caps breaking high,
A paleness crept upon their cheeks,
And a strange look in each eye.

To all inquiries that were made,
They feebly thus replied;
"I think I've got dyspepsia,
I feel 'ketchedly inside."

Now when the skipper saw the state
Of his unfortunate crew,
He mildly made suggestion,
That the vessel should heave to.

At this they all were angered,
Would have thrown him out right there,
But they'd thrown so much already,
They nothing more could spare.

Towards Newburyport in haste they sped,
And on Plum Island land,
Where quickly for a little rest,
They drop upon the sand.

They get at last to Newburyport,
Where each one made a vow,
He would not sail another rod,
He wouldn't anyhow.

So early in the afternoon,
They took the Eastern train,
With hearts as light as stomachs,
Soon trod home soil again.

Now each one if you meet him,
Will walk in sailor wise,
Will hitch his pants up by the waist,
And blast his starboard eyes.

Will wait upon you at the bank,
At Post Office, or store,
With a sort of rolling motion,
As if on deck once more.

Should danger ever threaten
Our own dear native land,
And heroes for the quarter deck,
Become in great demand,

We will send out from Peabody,
Upon the ocean brine,
Armed with a stomach pump apiece,
This bold and fearless nine.

Tickets to the High School exhibition, which takes place on the 27th, are out. About one fourth of the seats are reserved for parents and friends of the graduates, leaving the larger part of the house for the public.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The contract for the seats at the new town hall, has been given to C. B. Demarest & Co., of Brooklyn, N. Y. They will consist of iron frames with perforated wood seats and backs. They will be arranged on the floor of the hall in five rows, the two outside rows on each side with ten seats each, and the center row with twelve seats, making 922 seats on the floor. The gallery and balcony seats will be arranged with a five foot passage way between the rows, which are also divided into sections. The seating capacity of this part will be 579, making a total of over 1500 seats. It will probably be a month yet before the seats are put in.

At about twelve o'clock last Saturday, we saw one of the biggest exhibitions of "gall" we ever saw. A ten year old boy, came out of a liquor saloon, on Foster street, with a pail of beer. A stranger met him, took up the pail, drank a generous portion of its contents, and then handed it back to the boy, who began to cry as he proceeded on his way, probably in anticipation of the punishment he would receive from his parents.

The annual examination of books at the Peabody library will soon commence and all books from 1 to 419 will not be delivered after June 30, as will be seen by a notice in another column. It is believed that the librarian will be able to point with pride to the almost total absence of wanton defacement and scribbling upon, and tearing of books, which is such a source of trouble in many free libraries.

The total rain-fall for May was 3.20 inches. During the past ten years this amount has been exceeded but four times. During May, 1880, 3.35 inches fell; 1881, 3.90; 1882, 4.15, and 1878, 3.65. The mean temperature of the month was 59 degrees. This was the highest of any year in ten, except 1879, when it was 60 degrees; 1880, when 66 was recorded, and 1881, when the mean was 65. There were 13 fair days and 18 rainy days.

Mr. Chas. Symonds invites those who are in want of a team for business or pleasure riding to call on him at the Hotel stable on the square. As he keeps some twelve or fifteen horses there will be no difficulty in suiting all tastes. Coaches furnished for weddings, funerals or private parties at reasonable rates.

The PRESS requests churches and societies to furnish all the notices, statements, reports, etc., which they may wish to see in its columns, and if such items do not appear, they must charge it to their own negligence. As the insertion is free, they can at least take the pains to communicate directly to the office of publication.

People in town who are obliged to wear spectacles or eyeglasses are now being bored with spectacle peddlers. These creatures find out in some way the persons who are so afflicted and besiege their abodes morning, noon and night for them to buy their aids to vision, which are so superior to all others.

One thing is perplexing the mind of the average smoker. How is it that cigarettes have dropped from ten to five cents a package, while five cent cigars have not tumbled to two and a half cents, and two and a half cent cigars are not being given away.

Charles Odell, Salem's popular auctioneer, has several notices in this week's paper of interest to real estate owners. Several desirable lots of property are advertised on Boston street, a mortgagee's sale of land on Andover Street, and the estate of the late Jos. S. Nichols is offered at private sale.

Our readers who have not decided where to spend the coming vacation will do well to read the advertisement of Raymond the excursionist, in another column. Books containing a full description of the routes, terms, etc., can be obtained by dropping a postal to 240 Washington St., Boston.

The new counters in the shop of George Stevens have been put in, and the painting has been done by Mr. Ward. A large waiting room is the result of the addition and from thirty to forty people can be seated at once. It is expected that it will be open Friday, —it certainly will before Sunday.

A horse attached to a buggy, containing Mrs. Bennett of Lynnfield and a lady friend, had a fit on Main street last Saturday. During his struggles he injured slightly a boy who was near. After a delay of twenty minutes he was sufficiently recovered to be driven home.

Picture Frames for Engravings and Oil Paintings made to order. We have also on hand a fine assortment of Engravings at Low Prices. Smith & Robinson, 42 Market street, Lynn. Successors to S. A. Barton.

The engineers have purchased 1000 feet of Paragon hose.

The Regulars made their eighth annual excursion down the harbor on Saturday, in the yacht Excelsior. Soon after two o'clock, with favoring winds, the yacht was under full sail, and the trip along the North Shore was enjoyed by all, a panorama of surpassing beauty filling the eye with dissolving views as "from wave to wave we're driven." Gloucester harbor was made at an early hour, and after the call to satisfy the inner man had been answered by the whole party, showing that the delightful sail was not demoralizing, a quiet stroll through the town was taken, also a moonlight row in the harbor, making neighborly calls on several yachts anchored near by. At an early hour on Sunday morning we were again under way and soon rounding Eastern Point with fair indications of a good day's sail, but a light wind, which was soon accompanied by rain, made our progress through the water slow, and soon one by one nearly all the excursionists were experiencing that dread of all pleasure seekers on the water—mal de mer, as

"The little boat rides rapidly,
And now with shorter toss it heaves
Upon the heavier swell;
And now so near, they see
The shelves and shadows of the cliff
And the low-lurking rocks,
O'er whose bleak summits, hidden half,
The shivering billows burst."

The mouth of the Merrimac river was reached at last, and a pleasant hour spent on Plum Island, and then we sped away to Newburyport, where anchor was dropped, ond our short stay in that city failed to discover the one building which could make any pretentions to architectural beauty, as a recent article reported for your paper claimed for it. Soon the watch word was given and we were homeward bound, having enjoyed our two days trip on the water.

Mr. John E. Herrick, one of our town fathers, while attending a meeting of the Selectmen last Saturday, left his team in the sheds in the rear of the South Church. A couple of boys named John and Daniel O'Donnell, took the team and started on a trip to the Danvers Asylum, knowing that elevated place to be a suitable one for a fine view of the surrounding country. Shortly after they left, Chief Police Peasley was on their track. The boys learned that the officers were after them and left the team at Henry Wilson's, on their return. They were afterwards captured and their case came up in the police court this afternoon, and Daniel was discharged and John was sentenced to the Reform School.

About two years ago a man named Wilkins, living in Middleton, killed a large rattlesnake at the cross road, in the rear of Mr. Perley King's. About ten days ago a man employed by Mr. King saw another very large rattlesnake in the same vicinity, but did not succeed in killing it. These are the only snakes ever seen in that vicinity, and this latter one is supposed to be a mate to the one that was killed.

As Mr. B. F. Stevens was crossing the square last Friday afternoon two teams driving at a rapid rate down Main street approached the square.—One of them, a large wagon belonging to a well known grocer, struck Mr. Stevens on the ankle and knocked him down, making a painful injury. He was assisted to the store of J. F. Pickering, and afterwards conveyed to his home in Wilson's coupe.

Chief Peasley arrested a juvenile for stealing bark from the cars on the Lowell Railroad track last Monday. He was on top of the cars and in the act of throwing it to the ground, when caught. This is the third time he has been caught at the same business. After some wholesome advice from the officer the boy was allowed to depart.

Unity Camp of Uniformed Patriarchs made its first public parade Monday, and with the Salem Brass Band went to Ipswich. The camp mustered fifty-five patriarchs out of seventy enrolled and was under command of Captain George H. Blinn. The programme included a steamboat trip down Ipswich river and a dinner upon Grape Island, near the mouth of the river.

At the special meeting last evening of the trustees of the Peabody Institute, to consider the matter of reseating the hall, a committee was appointed to investigate the matter and report at some future meeting. The committee are F. H. Appleton, F. Osborn, Jr., Alex. B. Merrill, Geo. J. Winchester, Kendall Osborn.

Mr. A. L. Ames, of this town, who visited the west a short time since, returned home last Friday, bringing with him a small Creek pony, which will be used by his children. He reports Messrs. Buxton and Hanson as well pleased with the western country, and thinks that they will buy a farm and make the west a permanent location.

Jerry Cronan went into Carbrey's saloon on Foster street last evening, and being refused a drink he picked up an iron cuspidore and threw it at a lot of cut glass bottles filled with liquors in the rear of the bar, breaking seven of them. This morning he paid $15.35 for the racket.

Mrs. Nellie H. Bayley of Chicago, National Superintendent of Juvenile Work for the W. C. T. U., will give a "Chalk Talk" to the children in the South Church, on next Sunday evening at 6 o'clock. It is noticed that where she has gathered "the lambs" for these "talks" "the flocks are sure to follow." The adults are interested and see the point in all her "sermons" as plainly as do the children. She will give only a few addresses in the eastern states, as she is in great demand, and many states are to be visited, that the work with the young may be enthused and strengthened before the tenth annual of the woman's uprising on the temperance question occurs on Dec. 23, 1883. This dear woman will stir and encourage all who hear her. A collection will be taken to defray expenses.

It will probably take at least ten days to finish the work on the ponds that furnish our water supply, but when the job is completed it is believed by the water board that the town will be supplied with clean water and that complaint will be considerably less than last year. Brown's pond is well filled, Spring pond has about three feet more water in it, and the alterations at that pond have opened springs enough to furnish some 200,000 or more gallons of water a day, or about half the supply of the town. In the upper basin between the reservoir and Spring pond, the water is about a foot and a half higher than in the reservoir.

Last Monday Mr. Arthur W. Littlefield and Mr. Willard Cook launched their canoe at Danvers and made a trip on the river as far as Ipswich. The canoe is a simple arrangement made from canvas and manufactured in the west, where they are quite common.—They are very light weight and can be taken apart and easily carried in the hand. On Memorial day they took their canoe to Cedar pond and after catching a few pickerel paddled down the narrow brook leading from the pond, nearly to the Alms house, a feat that probably has never been done before.

As the season for toy-pistols draw near it would seem a wise move on the part of the Selectmen, (if we might be permitted to suggest it), to take some action to prevent the introduction of that destructive nuisance in Peabody. Last year we added several to the long list of fatal cases from this deadly plaything. The ambition to handle something as near a real pistol as possible is common to boyhood and it is just as well not to wait until some have been kill or maimed before doing something to prevent it.

The ladies, or several of them, have begun to complain of the lavish amount of water, that some of the parties having town water use in wetting down the sidewalks mornings. One lady tells us that it is her intention to start a petition unless there is a stop put to the practice. Dresses and shoes are made to suffer very materially, by their wearers being obliged to walk over such wet pavements.

The company of musicians who carry on their rehearsals in their room at a boarding house on Washington street every Sunday ought to know that the public are not so much interested in their practice as they are, and that the noise is a great nuisance to the great majority of people who think the Sabbath ought at least to be quietly kept.

NEIGHBOR.

We have been told that one of the engineers makes a pretty broad statement about the purchase of a certain kind of hose for the town. We have been spoken to about this by several, and each one adds, "I don't give you this as an item; that's what I heard, but perhaps you can find out about it." Evidently there is a leak, gentlemen, that should be stopped.

Complaint is very common of parties having plants and flowers stolen from our cemeteries. A resident near Harmony Grove says it is not an uncommsight to see half a dozen children at a time leaving the grove with their hands filled with flowers and even plants pulled up by the roots.

A lad picked up a black straw bonnet on Lowell street last Sunday morning, and had just begun to admire the flower garden attached, when the owner returned for her lost treasure, having gone quite a distance before discovering her loss.

Mr. Amos H. Corey has been appointed by the Engineers as engineer of steamer No. 2, at a salary of $200. The sum paid previously has been $300, and the engineer cleaned his own engine, but now as only one engine is used at a time it was decided to have them both kept clean by the janitor of the house.

MESSRS. SEABURY & JOHNSON:
I am slow to pin my faith to any new curative agent. BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER has won my good opinion. I find it an exceptionally cleanly plaster to use and rapid in its action. Many tests of its qualities in my own family, and among my patients, have convinced me that there is no other single article so valuable for popular use, none so helpful in cases of Lame Back, Local Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Congestion of the Bronchial Tubes and Lungs and Lumbago. You may feel free to use my name. Very truly yours,

Letter from the Far West.

NO. IV.

It is the general and natural supposition of strangers to Montana that mining is the leading interest of the territory. Such is not the fact. The sales of land and the applications filed for mining, for homestead claims, and for timber culture claims, in the Helena Land Office last year, covered a grand total of 254,800 acres. It is claimed that all the good arable land is already taken, as only the valleys which can be irrigated are fit for tillage.—There is often seen wonderful and skillful engineering in the construction of mining and irrigating ditches in this country. Ranch men here much prefer irrigation to natural rain-fall, as they can irrigate the crops just when they need it the most, and, as a result, the weight and quality of all cereal crops in Montana are much greater and better than in localities not dependent on artificial irrigation.

The natural rain fall is gradually increasing as the country settles up.—Should it ever be sufficient to fertilize the countless acres of bench land, in this territory, of eleven counties, a single one of which is nearly as large as the whole state of New York, then the fertility of Montana would seem to be endless. There is no soil more fertile or more easily cultivated whenever the water can reach it. Grain was sown here in the latter part of February. I was in the saddle for a whole day during the fore part of March in one of the most fertile valleys of the territory, where the season was as far advanced as I ever saw it in New England by the middle of May. I passed one field where three men were riding on sulky ploughs, each drawn by three horses, and each team so far apart that they were not in hailing distance of each other; countless cattle and horses and sheep dotted the country, everywhere "as fertile as the garden of the Lord."

A cattle ranch man is considered "well fixed" in Montana. Cattle are very large sized in this country and roam at large over the benches and through the mountains, costing their owner nothing for their keeping, and who very likely never sees them but once a year, at the "round-up" time, when the young stock are corralled and branded, and the old stock are sold and driven to market. Stock three years old readily brings from $40 to $50, and increase so rapidly that if a herder loses two-thirds of his stock in an occasional winter of unusual severity and deep snows he still makes several hundred per cent. on his money, taking the years as they come. Stock-raising is the leading and most profitable industry of the territory, and cattle are Montana's best crop at present.

The climate, like the country itself, is unique. It is safe to call it generally mild and salubrious. With a mean altitude probably not far from 5000 feet above sea level, the climate is certainly far more mild and uniform than the same altitude in any of the Eastern states. But the territory is so diversified in its surface and so extensive in its limits that the climate is necessarily variable according to the locality.—Helena is about 4400 feet above the sea and is located in a deep gulch, surrounded by mountains, and opening on the east into the Prickly Pear Valley, across which, in this clear and rarefied atmosphere, it looks as if one could step in half an hour. The valley, however, is 18 miles wide by 40 long.—Thus protected Helena has a very genial and sunny climate. In my four months' residence here I have not seen a drop of rain nor more than two inches of snow and but one day when the sun has not shone, and during much of the winter my room has been comfortable with the window open. We have had about one week of sleighing and about three weeks of intensely cold weather, all together. During this time the mercury went down once to zero, and three times below, registering once 20 degrees below and once 40 degrees below. But the temperature at twenty, or even forty, degrees below zero in this thin, dry air is no more severe than when at zero in New England, and is not noticed so much.—One of the most comfortable rides taken the last winter was coming in through the mountains when the thermometer registered 60 degrees below zero. The smoke and the very air seemed frozen, and hung motionless and heavy. The most uncomfortable ride was a coach journey of 40 miles when the mercury was 17 below and the wind was blowing nearly a blizzard. Men freeze at such times ere they are aware of it and are so blinded with the frost and snow that they sometimes perish in sight of their own dwellings—even in going from the house to the stable. Coach drivers this winter have wandered for hours in a route they have driven over for years—there being no fences and being unable to see the telegraph poles teams and drivers often wander aimlessly during a blizzard, at the mercy of the storm. In the ride above alluded to the trusty driver brought us safely through, but his face was so frozen that it could have been shaved with a knife like frozen meat.—Travellers in this country can easily dress so as to be frost proof. Two suits of underwear, including stockings, with the feet incased in German socks and arctic overshoes, without boots; a buffalo coat over the two inside coats, a buffalo robe over the lap, a soft hat and fur mittens, and one may bid defiance to anything in the shape of weather.

The death rate of less than twenty per thousand shows Montana's climate to be an unusually healthy one, while the numerous warm mineral springs, on every hand, make the territory quite a sanitarium for many. L. L. WOOD.

Farmers are sure to have a busy time for the next month, for they find that not only is this warm weather excellent for corn but it proves a perfect opportunity for the weeds. Those who have gardens also will find this the month when they will require attention. An agricultural exchange says that "later plantings of sweet corn and peas should be made every week during the month. Beans, whether to be used this month or ripened for winter, will do better planted this month than earlier, as they require abundant warmth. Lettuce for a late crop, cabbages, cauliflowers, celery and tomatoes may be put in at any time during the month. Spinach to succeed the early crops, dandelions for next year, beets for winter and turnips also may be sown."

BOATS, BICYCLES AND HAY FEVER.—Nature has resolved that all the people shall not enjoy themselves at once. With the opening of the season of outdoor sports comes the time of trouble for the poor victims of Hay Fever. For them flowers have no odor, and the summer little or no beauty. To snuff, sneeze and wipe their weeping eyes for three or four successive months:—this is their pitiable portion. Whether this form of catarrh is called hay-fever, hay-cold, rose-cold or rose-fever, makes no difference; they suffer just the same. There is no help in sea-voyages, there is no help in high mountain air. These only lighten the pocket and leave the disease unabated. But there is a positive cure in Ely's Cream Balm. We could cram these columns with grateful letters of the rescued. Try it and join them. If you continue to suffer it is because you neglect a remedy as sure as it is cheap and pleasant.

A novel sight yesterday was that of a mother boxing the ears of her son, a manacled prisoner, as he was being led to prison from the Court of General Sessions, where he had been convicted of assaulting a policeman. The son had almost arrived at manhood, and when his mother who, it appears had tried to bring up her boy in the way, in which he should go, saw him reflecting discredit upon his parents, she could not restrain her hand. Possibly there would not be so much work for the criminal courts if mothers made a practice of publicly chastising their sons who become law breakers.—N. Y. Sun.

TALMAGE ON HUSKING.

EARS OF CORN THAT DON'T MIND IT, AND OTHERS THAT DO.

"My hearers," shouted Rev. Dr. Talmage from his pulpit in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, on a bright Sunday morning last November, 'going at the rate of forty miles an hour last Wednesday, I got this sermon on husking. God has arranged that the ear and the husk shall be parted. Every rheumatic pain is but a thrust of the husking-peg: every neuralgic twinge is only a twist of the husker. Thus he takes away what hinders your soul's liberation."

Poetry is permitted to preachers; but the fact is, nobody wants to be husked nor does any one believe that the body is to the soul what the husk is to the corn. On the other hand, Nature teaches us to fight this husking process. Hence most people are thankful for whatever can abate those "rheumatic pains" and "neuralgic twinges."

That, at least, was the view taken of the subject by M. Alfred Baer, a French gentleman, who, at his pleasant home, Greenmont, near Sing Sing, N. Y., said, the other day, to a reporter:

"My life has at times been rendered almost intolerable by Rheumatism. I had tried different remedies without result. But PARKER'S GINGER TONIC gave me great satisfaction. You may tell Messieurs Hiscox & Co., of New York—the proprietors—that I certify to its perfect efficacy, as the Tonic has completely restored my health. Please say, also, that they are welcome to use my name, and ask them to accept my thanks," added the courteous Parisian.

Rheumatism is a symptom of kidney disease, not an affection of the joints or muscles. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC purifies the Blood, and acts with a success beyond that of all other preparations in cases of Dyspepsia, Liver, Kidney and Stomach disorders and in common Coughs and Colds. Prices, 50 cents and $1 per bottle. The latter the more economical.

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is

HEYLINGBERG'S

EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.
Mr. J. J. Heylingberg. Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,
FRANK A. BEAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired.
Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

TERRIBLE SUFFERING.

"His word is as good as a bank note at any bank in Lowell, and I know it." was the opinion of a well known citizen in speaking of City Assessor Francis Gomard. Your reporter found Mr. Gomard at his pleasant home, which, with many others, adorns Sumner street and fronts the charming park of South Common. Mr. Gomard said, "I had been, as many of my friends in Lowell know, a great sufferer from kidney and urinary troubles for a long time. My physician said it was the result of diseased kidneys and enlargement of the prostate gland. I had suffered terribly, and although my doctor's treatment had been the best which this city afforded, I got no better. I said finally, Doctor, it's no use. You have done all that is in your power to do, I know that; but I must get help from some other source or die.' Finally I was induced to try Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, a medicine which had been recommended very highly for kidney diseases. I received help at once. It has acted like a charm with me. Why so? Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is an honest preparation, and I know it. I didn't think anything would help me, but his has given me better health than any medicine ever prescribed for me. I have recommended it to ever so many of my friends in the city of Lowell, and with the same result. They think there is nothing like Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY."

What Mr. Gomard says can be depended upon, as any one acquainted with the gentleman knows.

ADMINISTRATOR'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

Pursuant to a license granted by the Probate Court for the county of Essex, will be sold at public auction on Saturday the twenty-third day of June, current, all the real estate of BETSEY BOWERS, late of Peabody, consisting of two lots, viz:

The dwelling house formerly occupied by said Betsey Bowers, on the southerly side of County street in South Peabody, with about 17000 feet of land, bounded southeasterly and southwesterly by land formerly of Peele, and northwesterly by land of Galencia.

A lot of land on the northeasterly side of Rhodes' Court in South Peabody, bounded southeasterly by land of Galencia, northerly by land of Wilson and Bushby, and easterly by land of Shaw, containing about 14500 feet of land.

The lot first mentioned will be sold at two o'clock P. M., and the other lot immediately thereafter, both sales to be upon the premises respectively.

LEWIS BROWN, Administrator.

Peabody, June 6, 1883.

COUNTY COMM'RS' NOTICE.

Peabody, April 19th, 1883.

To the Honorable Board of County Commissioners for the county of Essex.

The undersigned respectfully represent that the public convenience and necessity require that that part of Aborn street, in Peabody, between the residence of the late William Sutton and the corner of Aborn and Sutton streets, should be widened and straightened.

We therefore petition your honorable body to view the premises and to take such action in the matter as the public convenience and necessity may seem to you to require.

GEO. C. PIERCE and others.

THE OLD HOME.—A large portion of our girls who read this will some day love and marry. It is well; it is right; but do not be in a hurry to be grown up and go away from home. Life will never give you anything sweeter, better, happier than you have now. No love purer than your mother's; no care more kindly than your father's; no companionship like that of your brothers and sisters. Even to the man that loves you, you will not be the little Lily who was a baby once; who learned to walk and prattle, and was prettier than any other baby ever was; nor the little girl who was so wonderful a genius when she played her first tune on the piano or worked her first book-mark. He who falls in love with you may have known twenty other pretty girls, and have been, perhaps, at some time in love with them. In some things you will fall short of some one he has known. Your eyes will not be so fine as those of Miss Lavina, and you will never make cake as his mother does. Here at the old home you have been perfection; even if prudence kept your mother from saying so, they cannot believe any one quite so nice as 'our Lily.' Then linger a moment here, where some one else shoulders the burdens and shields you from life's worry; where the love is a love that does not change because of a new face, where the innocent days of childhood have been passed—your first and best home.—Christian Union.

THE COUNTRY NEWSPAPER.—Referring to the country journalist, George Peck, of Milwaukee, says: 'When we think of the hard drudgery that these enterprising, indefatigable workers do in a week, and the small amount of thanks and cash they receive in turn, we feel as if something was wrong somewhere. Why is it that in many localities the people do not appreciate the importance of a good newspaper, and sustain it by a liberal patronage, thus making it a better paper, is one of the most unaccountable things in the world. We have no urgent call now to say what we do; but we tell people in every locality where a paper is published, no matter how small and insignificant the paper may be, that every dollar they pay it for subscriptions or judicious advertising puts two dollars in cash in their own pockets. We have figured on it and we know. It may not look so on its face, but it is very deceiving. Lots of schemes that look as if they had millions in them, like the man who is sure he could pick out the right card in three monte, fail to return anything like millions, while other schemes that do not seem to amount to anything scarcely, pan out whole handfuls of nickels unexpectedly. And the country newspaper is of this class. Subscribe for your paper and pay for it in advance, and if you feel at the end of the year that you haven't got your money's worth, then your fortune is made. You can go to a museum and get $5,000 a year as a curiosity.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.—Do not neglect to put on a pair of gloves before beginning to sweep, if you wish to keep the hands soft and smooth.

It is said that a handful of hay in a bucket of water, placed in a room recently painted, is effectual in removing the disagreeable odor of the paint.

A small heated bar of iron, applied to the head of a rusted screw, will render its withdrawal as easy as one just inserted.

A teaspoonful of charcoal taken in a glass of hot water is often effectual in curing sick headache.

Liver should be placed in hot water before cooking, after being sliced thin, and then broiled or fried.

It is stated that half a cup of vinegar in the water will make an old fowl cook nearly as quickly as a young one, and does not injure the flavor. The vessel in which it is cooked should be of material that vinegar will not affect.

The proverb "labor while the day lasts, for the night cometh when no man can work," was written before anybody learned the printing business. —Lynn Item.

If you feel "all run down" and overcome with the heat, try a bottle of Morse's Yellow Dock. It is the best summer tonic and blood purifier ever offered to the public.

MESSRS. EDITORS.—Horse railroad managers cannot humor every whim of the public, but it does seem as though it would pay to be more considerate than they are sometimes. The train Monday evening due in Salem at 10.-05 was seven or eight minutes late. The whistle of the train was plainly heard, while the horse car, advertised to leave at 10.20, was at the station in Salem; and besides, the horse railroad people must have known that the train was about due. And yet the office was closed, the car left with a very small number of people in it, and forty or more persons who arrived at the station on time were left to walk home. People have a right to expect, to use no stronger term, that at the close of a holiday a little extra effort will be made for their convenience. It is terribly annoying for anyone, especially a lady, to be so left. There does not appear to be any good reason why the last horse car should not wait any reasonable time for passengers on the train. But to have it leave as it did Monday night, indicates either poor management or a disregard of the public, which the railroad company cannot afford to continue; and some way should be found by which the company should understand the feelings of the public. GEO. RANDALL.

THE "GARLAND" OIL STOVE. There are many kinds of oil stoves in the market, and all doubtless have their merits; but when a stove is introduced that really possesses exceptional advantages over all its competitors the public are not slow to find it out if proper means are employed to inform them of it. We write at this time with special reference to the "Garland" which we are informed by Mr. F. B. Stevens, the agent for this vicinity, at 75 Market street, Lynn, is meeting with the most gratifying reception. It is a new and improved oil stove, and is built in such manner as to possess the most perfect combustion, resulting, of course, in a heating capacity of special power. We have not space here to enumerate its points of superiority, but let it suffice to say that Mr. Stevens has sold more of them than of any other oil stove that he ever kept, and the satisfaction which they have given can be attested to by reference to a large number of purchasers. Briefly summarized, it is claimed that the "Garland" is safe, cleanly, economical, convenient and durable, with essential features not found in any other oil stove. We certainly recommend that they should be inspected before purchasing any other make.

At the last meeting of the Essex Club at Young's Hotel, Boston, the following officers were chosen: President, N. A. Horton, of the Salem Gazette; Vice President, Henry Carter, of Bradford; Secretary and Treasurer, E. N. Hill of Haverhill; Executive Committee, David Withington of Newburyport, George S. Merrill of the Lawrence American, Gen. William Cogswell of Salem, W. W. French of Gloucester, Hon. E. A. Mudge of Danvers, G. W. Cate of Amesbury, John P. Fernald of the Peabody PRESS. A vote of thanks was tendered the retiring officers. Hon. E. F. Stone, Lieut. Gov. Ames and Attorney Gen. Sherman were among the guests of the club.

Hotel St. Stephen, 32 to 38 West Eleventh St., New York City, is one of the quietest hotels on the European plan, in that metropolis. No dust, no noise from horse cars, yet but a moment's walk from Broadway or Fifth Avenue. It is kept by W. D. Ryder, a native of New Bedford, Mass., who knows the wants especially of Massachusetts people. Try it the next time you visit New York, and we guarantee the trial will be repeated.

Strawberries fresh every day—and all kinds of fruit at George Stevens'.

PEABODY.

Peabody did not celebrate the 17th!

Mr. W. C. Munroe is nursing a bad felon.

James E. Mahoney, Cadet midshipman of the U. S. Navy, is in town.

Philip H. Carbrey was granted a license by the Selectmen last Saturday.

The Unitarian society went on a pleasure excursion on the Merrimac river this morning.

A slight fire was extinguished without an alarm, at the Joseph Harris tannery last Saturday.

Mr. J. B. Thomas will extend the concrete walk from the Bank building to the corner of Foster street. Good idea.

Mr. C. W. Osborn sailed for Europe last Saturday in the Cephalonia, to be gone until August.

The strawberry festival of the Ladies' Social Circle at the So. Church, was very successful, netting them some $75.

Mrs. William Beckett, of this town, is spending a vacation with her folks at Jefferson, Me., where she hopes to recover her health.

A horse attached to a stone drag belonging to William Hayes ran away on Washington street last Friday, but was stopped before doing any damage.

John Bresnehan amused himself the other evening by breaking a show case, at a saloon on Walnut street, and afterwards paid the court $10.52 for the privilege.

The shop's crew of C. C. Farwell & Co. passed through Peabody in barges, last Monday, on their way to Nahant, where they held a picnic. The Danvers Brass Band accompanied them.

Peabody was not represented in Boston on the occasion of the voting by the Massachusetts Reform club to call an independent convention, previous to the regular and usual party conventions.

A young lady belonging in Lowell, violently insane, attracted considerable attention at the E. R. R. station this morning. She was carried to the insane asylum at Danvers, where she has been confined before, but was removed about a month ago.

Views of the Sunday floral decorations of the Methodist church have been taken, and will be for sale by L. W. Foan, Wm. Saunders and B. F. Stevens. The proceeds of this sale will go to help make up the loss of the pastor, Rev. C. N. Smith, at Malden, recently.

A stranger, evidently a stone cutter by trade, and very much intoxicated, entered one of the Salem horse cars, this afternoon, and commenced to flourish a hammer, which he held in his hand, pretty freely among the passengers. The conductor called Officer Peasley, who took the man to the station, he making a hard resistance all the way.

PENALTY FOR SIN.—June 14, Wm. Sweeney, drunk, $5.83. Sent to Salem Jail.

15, John Kilby, drunk, $5.83. Sent to Salem Jail.

16, John Bresnehan, malicious mischief, $10.52.

James Mulvaney, keeping liquors with intent to sell, case continued one week.

18, Lawrence Crowley, drunk, $5.83.

Michael Quinlan, drunk, $5.83.

20, Jerry Cronan, malicious mischief, $15.35.

On our fifth page will be found the advertisement of Chas. S. Goodridge, 63 Market street, corner Tremont street, Lynn. This is one of the finest stores in the city, and was fitted especially for his business. He keeps in stock a line of goods for the people; has no fancy prices and his class of goods are adapted to the wants of the mechanic. He has a stock of straw hats and caps for young and old, and the best line of Gent's furnishing goods in the county, also hammocks, shirts, etc. Silk and Manilla hats made over. Read his prices and when you are taking a ride on the horse cars call on Goodridge.

If words mean anything, the announcement of Wilmot this week certainly means business. The prices which he has made on some of his goods appear almost incredible, but we are assured by Mr. Boynton that they are made in good faith, and that they will be carried out to the letter.

Our young lady readers, especially, will be interested in the announcement made this week by David Conrad, that he has a large lot of parasols to be sold at 50 cents on a dollar. A word to the wise in this regard is as good as more.

J. E. Burrows, one of Lynn's wide awake dry goods' dealers, claims the attention of our readers by a new advertisement this week. Mr. Burrows keeps a large and well selected stock, and our readers desiring to call on him will ride to the Eastern railroad station in Lynn. Union street runs directly from the depot, and contains many large and fine stores.

Dr. Loring's bureau of agriculture is a costly humbug, and it can not well be otherwise. What in common can there be between the agriculture of New England and California, or of the states along the lakes and those along the gulf? Our country comprises a score of districts, all diverse in their wants and capabilities, and any attempt to look after them all from one standpoint is quite absurd. Each section is quite capable of supervising its own interests, and no outsider can do it for them. Jefferson was a good farmer as well as statesman, and foreseeing that the motive of patronage would lead to efforts for a national bureau of this sort, he recorded his opinion as follows:

"When the farmers of the country are directed from Washington when to sow and when to reap, the chances are that we shall go without bread."—Lowell Vox Populi.

The post-master general has issued an order to first and second class post-offices cautioning postmasters at such offices not to leave their post of duty without a written permit from the department, and that any disobedience of the order will be punished by removal. It begins to look as though the new postmaster general was business from the word go. Postmasters will now be obliged to stay at home and read postal cards, and drudge along like any of the clerks in the office, and let some one else catch all the fish and go to the picnics and Sunday school excursions. It will get so after a while that a postmaster's life will be no greater snap than that of being an editor.—Peck's Sun.

Wellman Osborne, the Lynn shoe dealer, has a new advertisement on the second page of the PRESS. Remember that the Lynn horse cars pass directly by the door of his Market street store.

Our readers who, while in Lynn, desire to do a little shopping, will find the names of reliable firms in our advertising columns. We can cordially recommend them all, as worthy of the patronage of our citizens.

Boys' Long Pants, in all styles and prices.

Custom Department

In this department we have marked down four different styles of fine imported English cassimere suits, which we have sold for $30, $28 and $25 per suit, and consider them cheap at that, but at this sale as a special inducement we shall make suits to order for $15 per suit. Or the coat for $8.75, vest $2, pants $4. Come early if you want to secure one of the bargains, for bargains they are and no mistake. All the rest of the clothes marked down from $5 to $7 on a suit. Now is your time, gents; improve it.

Hats and Caps.

At this sale we shall offer some special bargains in this department in both fine and medium grades.

You can buy a good stiff hat of us for 75 cents, $1, 1.25, 1.50 and save you from fifty cents to a dollar on every hat. Mackinaw straws for $1, regular price $2.

Furnishing Goods.

In this department you will find a fine line of underwear, neck ties, collars, cuffs, etc., at wholesale prices.

At this Great Bargain Sale we shall confine the gift of the Waterbury Watch and Chain or Clock to customers purchasing a suit or overcoat to the amount of $15 or more.

We are obliged to confine this gift to this amount as everything we offer is a bargain, and in many cases the goods are marked below cost. Our other presents will be given as before, viz., to every purchaser of $8.00 worth of clothing a beautiful pair of Roller Skates; and with $5.00 worth of clothing we give a fine Bat and Ball.

N. B.—At this great sale we shall give the above gifts in all our numerous departments.

Card.

We will take space to thank the public for their liberal patronage to us since we located in Salem, and are happy to say that our trade this spring has nearly doubled, and we are in hopes to increase it still more by good square dealings, low prices, and a large and well-selected stock.

Peabody High School.

GRADUATING EXERCISES.

The Senior class of the Peabody High School held their graduating exercises in the Peabody Institute this afternoon. The class numbers fifteen, and to each had been assigned some part in the exercises, while singing by the school, dumb bell exercises and instrumental music rounded off the programme. The examination in the studies took place yesterday in the High School building, and the exercises of to-day were in charge of the principal of the school, Mr. Jas. F. Ham. The exercises were opened at 2.30 P. M. by a piano duet from Von Weber which was rendered in a finished manner by Misses Annie P. Smith and Ella Winchester, after which Miss Henrietta Winchester delivered with unusually clear and distinct articulation the following

SALUTATORY ADDRESS.

Not as the Roman Gladiator "about to die" saluted Cæsar,— we "about to live," with joyous heart and bright anticipation, give cordial greeting to the many friends whose kind interest has led them hither.

That there is this interest we are sure; for every year, as June comes round, no matter what the weather, in sunshine or shower, in heat or coolness, this Institute is filled by a friendly multitude, eager to hear, approve, compare and criticise.

To a small circle of you, this occasion is as absorbing perhaps as to us. You in whose homes, for the past few weeks, the graduate has been the central star, who, perhaps, have been daily agonized by his preparatory struggles, by the tremendous question of "How and What to wear?" which has so agitated the mind of the girls,—you, we are confident, must regard this day, almost as much of a "Great Event," as it seems to us. We feel the nervous sympathy with which you are watching us, the trembling fear lest we "break down" and come to grief. Our consciousness of this sympathy makes us strong and eager to show you that your fears are groundless; to acquit ourselves with credit in the eyes of those who are not prejudiced in our favor, and whose praise will be bestowed only where it is deserved.

To these, our judges, we would say, Remember what we are, not men and women, learned and profound, accustomed to appear before large audiences--just boys and girls, completing a course of only three years, in which, however thorough, we certainly cannot have learned all things. Indeed, rather than ending our studies, are we not now beginning them, discovering by the light of the knowledge we have gained what greater things are yet before us? As to the benefit of public exhibitions, different opinions are held; but the number of those opposed to them is constantly increasing.

That they are no fair test of proficiency in a scholar must be admitted by all; and coming as they do, at the very end of the school year, in the heat of summer, after months of wearisome study, and treading on the heels of all sorts of examinations, they consume time which we would gladly give to our regular school work.

On the other hand, interest in the school is stimulated; the public favor us by their kindly presence; a pleasant assemblage of alumni and friends is brought together, and many a bright happy and association is given to memory.

Still as a class we objected, and in vain sought to convince the "powers that be" of the force of our suggestion.

However as we couldn't do what we would, we have been willing to do the best that we could to gratify the expectations of our acquaintances and friends.

To you, then, we leave these exercises, renewing in hearty fashion our words of welcome, and trusting that Justice as she holds the scales of judgment may be blinded only to our faults, while she looks open-eyed at all our merits.

The exercises were then carried out in accordance with the following programme:

DECLAMATION. Masters of the Situation, J. B. Gough
HARRY F. SPOFFORD.

CHORUS. Song Should Breathe of Scents and Flowers, Tilden
SCHOOL.

FRENCH DIALOGUE. L'Utilité de la Douleur.

Mercury, sentry of Olympus, discovers in his rounds the Soul and Body disputing. The Soul, unconscious of the Body's needs and pains, is constantly putting him in peril of life and limb, by her unjust exactions. The Body revolts. Mercury appears, arrests and brings them before Jupiter, who determines, with Minerva's advice, that instead of being separated, they shall be so closely bound together that the Soul shall feel the Body's discomforts and be warned by Pain of the limit of her power.

CLASS SONG. (By Mary E. Poole.)

Together in parting our voices we raise,
In grateful remembrance of our glad school-days,
Beseeching the Father our footsteps to guide
'Mid scenes of the future, which lie yet untried.

Three years on their pinions have swiftly flown by,
Since first we assembled, where fond memories lie,
And to those whose kind guidance has thus led us on,
Our thoughts oft will turn, though our school-life be done.

O may we with ardor our life-work pursue,
Though dark clouds may lower, the sun hide from view;
Yet sadly we linger, while tearful hearts swell
As we say now in parting, Farewell, O Farewell!

The exercises showed care and training on the part of the teachers, a novelty in the programme being a French dialogue which was capitally given, to the delight of those in the audience who were familiar with it, and the "Trial Scene" from the Merchant of Venice. The original essays including the class prophecies and valedictory will be found verbatim on our second page, to which our readers are referred. A song by Miss Ida B. Farnum and a piano solo by Harry F. Spofford were well received. The declamations by the masters, which were interspersed in the programme, will compare favorably with those of previous years.

The diplomas and Peabody Medals were then presented with appropriate remarks to each of the graduates, and to each member of the class were given books as follows:

Miss Henrietta Winchester, Prescott's Ferdinand and Isabella, 3 vols.; 3 volumes of George Elliot's works.

William H. Hill, Parton's Life of Andrew Jackson, 3 volumes; Walter Scott's Kenilworth.

CLASS PROPHECIES.

'Twas in the year of nineteen-three,
One day in hot July,
We talked of times that long were past,
My friend Etta and I.
Of that most dreadful day of all,
When, with brave attitude,
But trembling limbs and fainting hearts
Upon the stage we stood;
Still, notwithstanding all our fears,
The sad ordeal passed;
And then the class of eighty-three
Upon the world was cast.
Various are the employments
Which its members now pursue,
And frequently it pleases us
Their choices to review.
Etta and I had journeyed
In Italy to stay;
In studying vocal music
She whiles her time away;
By eminent musicians
Her voice is being trained;
Which, under such fine teaching,
Great richness has attained.
Two years ago while trav'ling through
The realms of sunny France,
At Paris saw we what deserved
More than a passing glance;
An exhibition of the arts
Was holding there full sway,
And handiwork of every sort
Combined in bright display;
But far surpassing all we saw
Of Kensington High Art
Gay daffodils of yellow hue
Formed an attractive part;
'Twas Annie's hand these wonders wrought,
And her rich work is seen
Upon the royal dresses
Of court ladies and the Queen.
In a neighboring department
Machinery was shown;
We saw there an invention
By a name to us well-known;
By Poor the patent was obtained,
For a discovery bright,
For the purpose of adjusting desks
To great or medium height;
It goes on sliding hinges
With catches here and there,
And a world-wide fame he has achieved
By this invention rare;
No one will have to suffer now,
As Elmer used to do,
From having desks which do not fit,
With this patent in view.
Across the rolling ocean
Another school-mate went;
On a mission to South Africa
Charles Proctor's heart was bent;
He journeyed unaccompanied
To that far distant clime,
And for a while he labored there;
But in a few years' time,
The dusky natives sought his life,
And weapons he had none;
So he fled back to America
His mission labors done;
And since that time, in politics
He's been a rising star;
Nor can hostile effort e'er avail
His character to mar.
A few years since, while at Turin,
A play-bill caught our eye,
For the name was so familiar,
We could not pass it by;
It read: "E. L. McDonald
This evening will enact
The touching role of Romeo,
With wondrous skill and tact."
We went to see our old friend act,
And well he played his part;
For the passion in the words he spoke
Sprang from his inmost heart;
In happiness supreme was he;
His very soul was stirred;—
He always felt the happiest
When making himself heard.
Perpetual motion is a thing
Each philosophic brain,
Through centuries and ages past
Has pondered o'er in vain;
But now, although the problem's solved,
No sage can claim the praise,
For our classmate, Eva Goulding,
The palm of victory sways;
The constant motion of this girl
Has won immortal fame;
And the great discovery she has made
Is coupled with her name.
Newspapers from our native town
Inform us of the rest;
Ella, we hear, has settled down
To dwell in the far West;
She roams about the prairies bread,
A fiery mustang rides;
And with her happy family
Most peacefully abides.
The choice of Ida Farnum
Seems suitable and fit;
She reaps great profits in the sale
Of flowers, most exquisite;
Weddings and funerals she supplies
With flowers of every kind;
And a nosegay for the button-hole
Fastidious dudes may find.
Spofford, of stout and robust frame,
In suitable apparel,
Concentrates all his energies
On bantams in a barrel;
At all the agricultural shows
His Brahmas take the prize;
And the secret of his grand success
In his love for chickens lies.
Living apart from all man-kind,
Rena, they say is found,
Where the buzzing of the angry bees
Exceeds all other sound;
In the culture of this species rare
A busy life she lives,
And this somewhat odd vocation
A princely income gives.
William Hill, a studious lad,
When his school course was done,
In a young ladies' college
A professor's title won;
His pupils like his gentle ways
And readily obey;
His slightest wish is law to them;
They please him every way.
Within the last decade of years,
An enterprising man
Has adorned our town with a hotel
On the European plan.
The landlady is Hattie Brien
Who, with a smiling face,
Both cheerfully and well performs
The duties of her place.
The cooking, of the choicest sort,
Is liked by all who taste;
The bread is light, the butter hard,
The pies of flaky paste.
A pugilist, Upton by name,
All through the United States,
His daring exploits now displays
At most unusual rates.
He far surpasses Sullivan
In taking millions in,
And travels round from place to place
With pockets full of tin.
At eighteen, in society
Helen made her debut;
But its gayety soon wearied her,
And pale and thin she grew;
The doctor ordered change of scene;
Sea air would be the thing,
A voyage to the West Indies
Good health to her would bring.
A wealthy Cuban sought her hand,
Sought, but 'twas all in vain,
Marriage contained no charms for her,
Single she would remain.
Her health returned, her native town
Received her back once more,
And she is now as gay and bright
As in the days of yore.
Etta's companion I am called,
Her most obedient friend;
To quench her thirst insatiate
On me she does depend.
A flask, containing ice water
Is always at her side
Which, by my ever-watchful care,
Is kept full well supplied.
We live in peaceful harmony
Which no man dares invade,
Nor can the flight of passing years
Obscure it by their shade.

LOCAL HISTORY.

The town of Peabody, County of Essex, State of Massachusetts, is situated fifteen miles N. N. E. of Boston, twenty-three miles E. S. E. of Lowell, sixteen miles S. E. of Lawrence in 42 deg. 32 min. North Latitude, 70 deg. 35 min. West Longitude, and is bounded on the north by Middleton and Danvers, on the east by Salem, on the south by Salem, Lynn, and Lynnfield, and on the west by Lynnfield and Middleton. Its total area is 9,050 acres; its valuation $6,700,000; and its population at this time nearly 10,000.

Peabody was originally a part of Salem and was known as Brooksby from the convergence of Goldthwaite's and Proctor's brooks near Peabody Square. When the town was divided into parishes it was known as the Middle Precinct or the South Parish, because of its situation south of Salem village, between it and Salem proper. On June 9, 1757, the South Parish and Salem Village were incorporated into the town of Danvers. The South Parish became a separate town May 18, 1855, and its named was changed to Peabody, April 13, 1868.

There were families living in Brooksby as early as 1633. William Trask received 50 acres of land near the head of North river, where he erected one of the first mills in Salem. This North river was a far grander stream than now, and was navigable for quite large boats up to Peabody Square. Richard Adams received about 5 acres near Trask's mill. Before this in 1629, John, Hugh, Samuel and Christopher Brown received land and settled in the southern portion of the town near Brown's pond. Robert Cole obtained a grant of 300 acres near Proctor's brook, and Rev. Samuel Sharpe as large a tract near Marble Meadow. Land was granted in Brooksby in 1637 to John and Anthony Buxton, to Richard Bartholomew, near Bartholomew's pond, to William Clark, near Cedar pond, and to Lawrence and Cassandra Southwick.

Besides the above, the Proctors moved here from Ipswich in 1660, the Pooles from Cambridge in 1690, the Fosters from Lynn in 1700, the Suttons from Rowley in the same year, the Jacobs, Needhams, Prestons, Shillabers and other prominent and respected families at different periods. The Osborne family was among the early settlers and has always borne a prominent part in town affairs.

The spirit of freedom that actuated our revolutionary sires and spurred them onward to snap the manacles of oppression was exhibited in town at an early date. The people of this town seemed to scent the danger from afar, and evidently waited only an overt act on the part of the oppressors to appeal to arms. Even the clergy threw out words significant and hopeful for the cause of freedom. Mr. Holt, a former pastor of the South church, was heard to say: "I had rather live on potatoes than submit." This same Parson Holt built the house on Main street in which Dr. Weston's office now is. Danvers furnished five companies of men at the battle of Lexington. Gideon Foster, one of the commanders, was present at the laying of the corner stone of the Lexington monument sixty years later. He thus recalled the event: "I was then about twenty-six years of age. About ten days before I had been chosen commander of a company of minute men who were always ready at a moment's warning. They all assembled where we are to-day assembled; they all went, and in about four hours from the time of starting they travelled sixteen miles on foot and met the enemy."

Many chivalric deeds were performed by our citizens in winning this doubtful conflict. Brave and fearless they "dared all that might become men" for their country; and if the 19th of April, 1775, was a glorious day for America, then was it also glorious for Danvers, who sacrificed seven of her sons on the Altar of Liberty, out of the fifty who there perished; and though she was farther from Lexington than any of her sister towns who were represented at the battle, yet she lost more of her children than any town except Lexington.

In old times there stood on the eastern corner of Main and Washington streets a two story building known as the Bell tavern. It was the most noted place in town. All the loafers and other people of the town gathered here to chat over the events of the day, and to learn the news from the other parts of the world by means of the stages which stopped at its door. The old south room was the scene of many a merry dance by the young people who made the walls resound with their peals of joyous laughter. People from the outskirts of the village always dismounted at the old horse-block in front of the tavern, and went to do their trading, or if it was Sunday they went to church. Instead of going home at noon they brought their dinners and ate them in some quiet corner near the tavern. A great deal of romantic interest clusters around this spot. In 1788, the sad and tragic life of Eliza Wharton came to its close. Her pathetic story seems to have created a deep and wide spread impression and the pilgrimage to her grave in the Old Burying ground has not yet ceased, though the rage for relics has left few chippings of the stone which marked her resting place. The Post Office in Peabody was established in Feb., 1832. Dr. George Osgood was the first postmaster.

Tanning was commenced in 1739 by Edward Southwick, who began by using half hogsheads for vats. His tannery was situated on Main street nearly opposite the head of Washington street. Since that time the business has so increased that it is now the principal industry of Peabody. There are at this time about fifty establishments, employing a capital of over $1,000,000.

Our very effective fire department originated Aug. 25, 1800, when an engine was placed at the Bell tavern. The schools were started in 1711. Two years later Katharine Daland received 5£ for teaching, and 7£ in addition were raised for the further instruction of the youth. From that time on the schools have increased in number and excellence till at this time there are twenty-two public schools, four male and thirty-four female teachers, and the amount raised last year was nearly $24,000. Among the noted men the town has produced are Nathaniel I. Bowditch, Hon. Daniel P. King, Gideon Foster, Dennison Wallis, who established the Wallis School Fund, and last but not least the man from whom the town receives her name, George Peabody. He was a generous, great-hearted man, born in obscurity and elevated to the companionship of nobles. He did much to promote education in this country, giving millions to advance its cause in the South alone. His munificent gift to the poor of London enabled the commissioners of the Peabody Donation Fund to house 14,604 persons last year.

ESSAY.

"ALL THE WORLD'S A STAGE."

"All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players;
They have their exits, and their entrances,
And one man in his time plays many parts."

"This wide and universal theatre" in which we each play a part, presents in many ways the forms of the drama for consideration. One continuous course, of whatever kind it may be, is monotonous without its intermingling varieties. So Life would be if deprived of its vicissitudes. Thus naturally we are drawn to the drama and enjoy it. "Youth with all its charms," and "Old age with all its cares and anxieties," each with their shifting scenes, from day to day, afford a wide field for drama of greater or less importance.

Every coterie, clique, or family represents a drama. Sorrow's influences are felt by all its members. But how quickly the surroundings will change, the gloom vanish as a mist, on the receipt of good tidings from the supposed unfortunate one. "A smiling face gazing in a mirror, is greeted with a smile;" so do joys which are generously bestowed in some households, reflect themselves in the faces of their friends. A little school-boy has lost a toy he was partial to—his bosom friend grieves with him at his loss. By chance, after they have parted, the missing treasure is found; his face aglow he greets his companion, and even before he makes his good fortune known, delight spreads from one countenance to another, as by magic.

It is interesting and often times beneficial to observe people,—their habits, modes of living, conversation, attire, etc. We are not only entertained by noticing them, but gain some new instruction by careful observation. A little child comes into the world, ignorant of the ways of life; gradually by close perception it soon learns for itself to take the part, whether patron or client, in the vast roll of personæ in the world's play.

"A person is known by the company he keeps" either in literature, or among men. It is best that we adopt unblemished models. Dickens, the most popular English novelist, Shakespeare, our greatest dramatist and poet, Scott, with his comprehensive spirit of humanity, all profoundly influenced the people of their day, and that influence will long survive. Then, too, there are dramas in Life on a grand and even colossal scale, magnificent pageants gleaming with golden splendor, dazzling the beholders, and involving thousands in their consequences.

Anniversaries and all public celebrations of past events present brilliant dramatic scenes. The drama does not pertain wholly to the celebration, for that event is but an episode among the moving scenes. Every pre-eminently great man in a nation, from the President or Monarch, to the lowest official, at any epoch, or in any era, is the chief character of a grand drama.

Gen. Washington stands forth a grand and striking personage in dramatic scenes. Well known as the young surveyor, then as an officer in the French and Indian Wars, and later as the renowned commander-in-chief of the American forces of the Revolution. Afterwards raised to the Presidency of the Young Republic, and last of all, the venerated Father of his Country, in the seclusion of Mt. Vernon. The lives of Elizabeth, Napoleon, Lincoln, Bismarck, with many other illustrious lives, have presented grand dramas, but "one example is worth a thousand precepts." These great men do not have their greatness come to them, but it is gained by unswerving attention to duty, not by squandering time.

Every pre-eminent man or woman in any community, large or small, is also the leading actor in a drama. Such were Daniel Webster, Charles Sumner, Mrs. Stowe, and others. Every individual life is the center of a drama. Life is not merely an existence. Every one has a high and noble part to perform, some more complex than others, but it is the desire of all to lead a life worthy of imitation. It is left in our power to determine whether our part in the drama of life shall be first in rank or a subordinate one. Let us choose, then, that our actions be kind and obliging, assisting others whether the task be a pleasure, or not. These little acts in our daily lives do not exert their influence immediately, but like the grain in the cornfield, we sow the seed, then reap the harvest.

"Do noble deeds, not dream them all day long,
And so make Life, Death, and that vast Forever,
One grand, sweet song."

ANNIE P. SMITH

VALEDICTORY.

The class which graduates this afternoon is the thirtieth class which has entered the Peabody High School. Three years ago we commenced the course of studies which these exercises to-day complete, and the time is fast approaching when the Class of '83 will join the ranks of the twenty-nine classes gone before and become graduates of the school.

During our High School course we have received instruction from five different teachers. We feel that they have striven earnestly and zealously in our behalf; and if we have fallen short of what we might have accomplished it must be ascribed to our years and a neglect of our opportunities. To our teachers we would tender our heartfelt gratitude, and we sincerely hope that they may be generously favored in their future labors.

Classmates:—To-day our small company is to be disbanded. For three years we have been associated together, making preparation for our future work. We are about to set out on the unknown sea of life to be tossed no one knows whither. In choosing a vocation, we must not be guided by love of ease and fear of bodily toil; mental exertions are more difficult. The farmer at his plough, the mechanic in his workshop, enjoys rest and recreation more regularly than the man of letters; they are more free and have fewer responsibilities. Success will come to us only through great effort, zeal and earnestness on our part, and belief in the object of our own. We live in a country where the highest honors await the successful in every vocation of life and the only titles that can ennoble us here are virtues, ability, and labor.

Our motto, "Carpe Diem," is one worthy of following, and let us all do our best to "improve daily."

Book Notices.

In the North American Review for July, President Julius H. Seelye writes of "Dynamite as a Factor in Civilization." In "The Last Days of the Rebellion," Lieutenant-General P. H. Sheridan recounts the operations of the cavalry divisions under his command during the week preceding the surrender of Lee, and offers a highly important contribution to the history of the late war. Wm. S. Holman, M. C., makes a striking exhibit of "The Increase of Public Expenditures." "Democracy and Moral Progress," by O. B. Frothingham, is a philosophic forecast of the probable outcome of "government by the people themselves." Z. R. Brockway, Superintendent of the Reformatory at Elmira, N.Y., points out some "Needed Reforms in Prison Management;" Thomas Sergeant Perry writes of "Science and the Imagination;" and finally there is a Symposium on "Church Attendance"—the question whether the churches are growing to be less of a power for good now than in former times—the symposiasts being "A Non-Church-Goer," Rev. Dr. Wm. Hayes Ward, Rev. Dr. James M. Pulman, and Rev. Dr. J. H. Rylance. Published at 30 Lafayette Place, New York.

The ART AMATEUR for July contains pleasing designs of buttercups and apple-blossoms for china painting, a charming pond-lily design for embroidery, two pages of jewelry designs, a page of monograms, and a page of capital borders for wood-carving. The work of American painters in the Paris Salon is reviewed, and drawings are given of fifteen of the most attractive and important pictures in the exhibition. An admirable and copiously illustrated article on "The Theory and Practice of Pen Drawing" is alone worth the price of the number to the many who are interested in this humble but useful art. Other valuable practical articles are those on art teaching for women in Paris, landscape painting in oil, painting heads on china, wood-carving and wood-staining. No one interested in art should fail to examine the July issue of this excellent magazine. Price, 35 cents; per annum, $4. Montague Marks, Publisher, 23 Union Square, New York.

FRANK LESLIE'S Popular Monthly for July abounds with most interesting and instructive reading. "The Longest Span in the World," by A. V. Abbott, has fourteen illustrations of the Brooklyn Bridge, of which full details are given. Cornelius Mathews contributes "The Poet of Home—John Howard Payne;" this number also contains an unpublished story and poem by Payne. There are stories and sketches by Oscanyan, N. Robinson, etc.; several charming poems, and a miscellany of a varied and pleasing character. "Winter Quarters" is the title of the colored frontispiece. Twenty-five cents a copy, $3 a year, postpaid. Address Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

Rome, Tours, and Newport form the backgrounds of the three strikingly brilliant serials beginning in the ATLANTIC MONTHLY for July. That the ATLANTIC follows its usual custom of utilizing the work of the best American authors rather than that of English writers may readily be seen from the above announcement, and consequently few magazines can show such attractions for the summer months. American life, politics, and thought are respectively touched upon in "Boomtown," a Western sketch by F. D. Y. Carpenter; in a careful article entitled "Municipal Extravagance," by Arthur B. Ellis; and in "Some Phases of Idealism in New England," by Rev. O. B. Frothingham, whose articles always command and reward careful attention. Careful reviews of new books, and the Contributors' Club, complete an unusually agreeable number. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

A feature of the July CENTURY is a portrait of John Brown and "Recollections of John Brown's raid" by Ex-Congressman Boteler of Virginia, followed by Comments on the above by Frank B. Sanborn. There are articles by Henry James, James Herbert Morse, E. V. Smally and others, besides Summer Songs, Topics of the Times, Open Letters, "Bric a brac," etc. For sale by the Peabody News Co., who have all the leading Magazines of the day.

HARPER'S MONTHLY has an exquisitely beautiful frontispiece, after a picture by Church; beautifully illustrated papers on Hampstead Heath, Conventional Art, The Romanoffs, Cincinnati, The Second Generation of Englishmen in America, and Chatterton; a short story by Charles Reade; a lively parlor drama; and numerous other attractions.

The June MANHATTAN has illustrated papers on Guatemala, and Chester and Oxford; Joel Benton has a paper on A Poet Too Little Known; and there are several short stories and a number of poems of more than average merit.

The July number of ST. NICHOLAS will be especially attractive on account of a finely written and profusely illustrated article on the Brooklyn Bridge. There is much else that will instruct and interest, including prize compositions on "Robert Burns," and "A Shark in Sight." The Peabody News Co. have it for sale.

QUEER PEOPLE.

Under this captain the Chinese take the lead. They are always Asiatics, adhere to their national customs, dress, and religion—if they have any of the latter. They perambulate the streets always in single file, and loudly talking to each other down in their throats, indifferent to all their surroundings, as though there were none but themselves within a thousand miles. They are found everywhere in this country. They are all over Helena, but literally swarm in that section of the city known as "China Town." I have stood in their shanties, where with out-stretched arms I could reach across the room, and yet in one such room may often be found ten bunks for two chinamen each. How they live in so small compass is a mystery. But they are very healthy I think and always clean and tidy in appearance. And I have not yet seen one drunken or idle chinaman.

Their specialties I take to be washing and cooking. Their charges are high. As cooks they often command $40 and $50 per month. They are the only Bridgets to be found in this country, and baring a few native customs, make very acceptable kitchen help. They have a national habit of using their bare and swarthy necks for a towel rack, and as their necks are always sweaty over the hot fires, they are thought by fastidious house-wives not to impart the most agreeable odors to the dish towels. They are said to make their bread as they sprinkle their clothes—by passing the milk and water through their mouths—which is very nice until found out, by the lady of the house, and then "the Chinese must go."

They are natural gamblers. I have counted 30 and 40 chinamen standing in a pyramid on chairs, boxes and tables round a small gambling board, and I think ten or a dozen of such crowds can be nightly seen in China Town. In following their national customs they are often quite extravagant. In celebrating their New Year's day, 500 Chinamen spent $1000 for fire-crackers alone, which was but one item of the festivities. They would string forty or more bunches together, then tie them to a pole and hold up two of such poles at once, and set them on fire, replacing the poles with new strings as fast as the old ones were consumed, and so continuing for hours amid a perfect pandemonium.

Another class of queer characters are the mining prospectors, who often live all winter in the mountains, in a tent, and oftener with no tent, sleeping at night warmly wrapped up in their blankets, in the open air, on or under the falling snow. That they can do this with the temperature in the mountains sometimes 40 and 50 degrees below zero in mid winter seems incredible. But I often meet such characters. Men will do any thing for money.

By no means the least interesting people I have met in this country, are those who came here in the earlier days of Montana, and became fascinated by, and wedded to a life of isolation. I frequently meet people reared amid the culture and luxury of eastern homes, who now prefer a log cabin and seclusion to the scenes in which they were reared. It is not uncommon to hear this class regretting that the railroad, that great civilizer, is so near at hand. In my travels I have had frequent occasion to accept the hospitality of a widow lady, fifteen miles from town, whose husband came to Montana years since, and engaged in mining interests. At the time of his death he lived on a cattle ranch, where his wife still resides, in a fine house quite sumptuously furnished. Her four children, except the youngest, whom she keeps with her, have been educated in the East. Here on the outskirts of a little mining camp, where she is deprived of all the social attractions to which she was once accustomed, and where I have been awakened at night by the barking of wolves under my very window, this woman with her aged mother, little son, and hired help, apparently meets her ambition in raising some of the finest stock in the country, for which her extensive ranch is well adapted. She is the best type of a business woman I have ever met. She owns another large ranch fifty miles on the other side of town, where she has a band of 80 horses—more or less of them thorough bred, some of which are worth $1000 apiece. Your correspondent is promised the use of a fine saddle horse from this band. She is a great horse-man, or perhaps I should say horse-woman, which characteristic is inherited by her oldest son—possibly to his disadvantage, as in him it tends to the race course, and horse racing in the West, like horse racing in the East, is bad on the morals. This woman owns the celebrated stallion "Black Diamond," or did own him before he passed into the hands of her oldest son. Unless his looks be-lie him, "Black Diamond" is certainly a superb beast, and is without doubt King of the turf in the North West. He has a public record of 2.30, which was not up to his full speed and he has done much better than that under the hands of his trainer. Is black as a coal, 16 hands high, foaled in 1874, weighs 1134, bred by J. D. Carlisle, Jessamine County, Kentucky, sired by Mambrina Patchen.

Some sixty miles from Helena on the Benton road is a ranch owned and occupied by W. D. Nichols, who owns a $40,000 hotel in Omaha. He is also one of the heaviest tax payers in Helena, and a director in one of the Helena banks, in which he is a heavy stockholder. Mr. and Mrs. Nichols live in a log cabin scrupulously white-washed inside and out, and live entirely alone, without any other inmates in the cabin. Opposite the stove in the kitchen, is a rack of loaded guns. Mr. Nichols is often away and his wife is then left alone. When "Joseph's Band" passed through that section of the country some years ago, some of the red rascals found Mrs. N. alone one day and walking in and pointing to the trap door leading to the cellar, said, "White Squaw hide." But not caring to give them the liberty of the house to help themselves, she pointed to the rack of guns and said "me shoot." They concluded not to stop. When Mrs. N. wants milk she mounts a favorite stallion and drives a cow into the shoot. A shoot is a board fence in the form of the letter V, into the point of which the cow is driven and a gate shut behind her. Then you go round to the side of the pen and open another small gate and milk the cow in spite of herself. This woman is over sixty years old and has not been in Helena for seven years.

There are advertised in this weeks' issue five excursions by Raymond, to be taken next month. Those of our readers who have enjoyed any of these excursions know that they mean pleasant society, the best accommodations, and every comfort that the traveler can desire. Rooms at hotels are engaged and selected in advance—the excursionist knows just where he is to be located, and every thing is included in the price of the trip. Is a city or locality reached with interesting scenes and associations luring the traveller to a ride in its denizens? Behold a carriage is in waiting, and all at no additional expense. In fact, every wish is anticipated by the conductor. We cordially advise our readers who have not decided where to take a vacation to consider these excursions. Send for a pamphlet of the routes laid out, and if after reading them you do not decide to go with some of the parties, it must be because you are hard to please. Our advertisement gives an outline of the different routes, but the full details and itinerary from day to day can only be obtained by the neat pamphlets which Mr. Raymond, 240 Washington St., Boston, will send to any one free of charge.

At a meeting of the stockholders of the Boston, Revere Beach and Lynn railroad last Thursday the capital stock of that road was increased to the extent of $150,000. Of this it is understood that only $100,000 will be issued at present. In reply to inquiries, the president of the company informed the meeting that the affairs of the road were in a prosperous condition. The gross earnings for the first half of the year show an increase of $23,000 over the corresponding period of 1881-2. In May last the number of passengers carried showed an increase of 44 per cent. over the same month of last year.

Miss Sadie Martinot is to appear next week at the Bijou Theatre in Boston, and "Patience" in which Miss Martinot will appear as Lady Angela, and lead the chorus of love sick maidens, will be given. "Virginia" is in active rehearsal. It will probably follow "Patience." With Miss Martinot, Miss Minnie Conway, Mr. Digby Bell and other favorites in the cast, the performance of Stephens & Solomon's reconstructed opera will be awaited with much interest.

The incoming fourth class of the high school is one of the largest that has ever entered the school. It will be necessary to have an additional teacher if the school increases.—Milford Gazette.

And there are four teachers now,—two male and two female. Evidently the High School is a popular institution in that town, for which its citizens are to be congratulated.

It not infrequently occurs when persons are asked if they will subscribe for a local newspaper, or if they already take it, that they reply: "No, but neighbor B takes it, and I have the reading of it every week." They are benefited every week by the toils, perplexities, and expenditures of those who receive nothing from them in return.—Exchange.

If you feel "all run down" and overcome with the heat, try a bottle of Morse's Yellow Dock. It is the best summer tonic and blood purifier ever offered to the public.

OSBORNE, LYNN.

FIFTH WEEK

— OF —

OSBORNE'S GREAT SALE

— OF THE —

CUSHMAN STOCK.

THE EXCITEMENT ON THE INCREASE!

STILL GREATER BARGAINS THIS WEEK!

ENORMOUS SALES AND UNPARALLELED SUCCESS!

In spite of the fact that business generally throughout the country, is dull, and the Retail Boot and Shoe trade in particular, there has been no abatement of the excitement caused by our sale of the Cushman stock. This is a positive proof that our advertisements are bona fide in every particular, and if customers occasionally do get disappointed by not finding an article that is wanted, they must recollect that when goods are offered at such low figures, an early inspection is advisable and necessary. In such a rushing business as we are having on this stock, it is impossible to tell exactly when a lot of goods will be sold out. The programme we have prepared this week, is by far the most attractive we have yet offered.

READ! REFLECT! PONDER!

Don't Cry Humbug! Don't be Sceptical! Examine samples, permit your Eyes' Judgment to Verify our Announcement.

One thing is certain, we intend to dispose of every dollars worth of the Cushman stock immediately, and with that end in view, shall

CUT, SLASH AND SLAUGHTER PRICES.

Nothing but the purchase of this Large Stock of Goods at about Fifty Cents on the Dollar, would warrant the prices we make. Don't get it into your head that they are old goods, for they are not. They are equally as good as any Boots and Shoes to be found.

Nobody need wear old Boots and Shoes after seeing the Great Bargains we are offering.

We are selling Ladies' Kid Quarter Lined Croquet Slippers for 45 cents, guaranteed worth 75 cents.

A lot of Ladies' Kid Button, for $1.10, worth $1.50.

A large lot of Stacy, Adams & Co. world renowned Men's Congress Button and Bals, sizes 5, 5 1-2, 6, 9 and 10, selling for $3.00, which is about half the price this line of goods is sold for throughout the country. No man wearing these sizes can afford to pass them by.

A lot of Ladies' Fine Serge Button, 16 thread, sizes 2 1-2, 3, 3 1-2, in B, C and C½ widths, for 90 cents. Worth, and we are selling the large sizes for $1.90.

A lot of Men's Nobby Styles Hand Sewed Strap Shoes, selling for $3.25, $3.50 and $4.75, which we defy you to buy elsewhere of same quality within one dollar per pair of our selling price.

A lot of Men's Hand Sewed Congress Button and Bals, selling for $3.00 and $3.50. Usual selling price on same goods, $5.00.

500 pairs Ladies' House Slippers, only 11 cents, comment is unnecessary.

Ladies' Serge Slippers selling for 23, 45 and 80 cents.

Misses' School Shoes, 85 cts., 95 cts. and $1.10. Sold elsewhere for 25 cents more per pair.

A large lot of Children's School Shoes, only 75, 85 and 95 cents, same quality cannot be bought in this city within 15 cents of these prices.

A large lot of Men's all Solid Strap Shoes, worth $1.00, selling for the absurd price of 65 cts., and precisely the same goods others sell for $1.00.

A splendid shoe in Congress, Bal, and Strap, for $1.25, price elsewhere $1.65.

CARD.

We would respectfully request all who possibly can, to make their purchases as early in the week as possible. This will make it much more agreeable to our customers and will greatly facilitate our business, as Saturday it was almost impossible to manage the immense crowds which thronged our two stores.

The Peabody Press.

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

In order that our employes may enjoy the Fourth of July, by a full holiday, the next issue of the PRESS will be printed TUESDAY EVENING, in season for delivery. Our advertisers will please bear this in mind and send in their favors as early in the week as possible.

THE COLUMNS of the papers are this week crowded with graduation exercises of our schools and colleges. Midsummer, by unanimous consent, is the time for the ending of the school terms. And with it comes the baccalaureate sermons, the essays of the graduates, and the reunions, receptions and awarding of prizes. We give place, ourselves, to these closing exercises of our Peabody High School, selecting it because it is the only one giving a public exhibition, and because completing the course of study with our youth, in most cases, it is deserving of especial mention.

It is not a matter of commendation that so much attention should be given to these closing exercises of our schools. It ought not to be the fact that at these times, and these times only, is any attempt made to ascertain what the scholars and teachers have been doing for the year which has passed. But the fact remains. Many parents never enter a school, but wait until "examination" to see what their children have done. This necessitates some sort of a showing on the part of the schools. With regard to the High School exhibition, its advantages are obvious, the exercises being such as to bind the classes into closer love for each other, besides popularizing the High School with many of our citizens who have not any too great love either for the school itself or for the studies which are pursued there.

The question has been many times asked, what do all these examinations amount to? and we confess there is some reason for the inquiry. It will certainly not be claimed that by them the School Committee are to know of the scholarship or work of the teachers for the year which is ended. If they are not cognizant of this without or even before these examinations, they should be, and our citizens expect them to be. We know of a case where a teacher had been promoted during the year; the examination of a certain class by the Committee was entirely on the work of this teachers' predecessor. How were they or the parents to know by this what the present teacher had done, or whether anything had been done? The work of the scholars,—the work of the teachers as well, can better be determined by the frequent and careful oversight of the Board, coupled with frequent written examinations, on which promotion may perhaps be based, than upon this annual examination, which is oftentimes a farce. But the old time custom must, we suppose, be adhered to, at least as long as parents and citizens, who should be interested in our schools, will not take any other time or method for ascertaining their true condition.

A GOOD example of the Marblehead strikers being paid in their own coin, occurred last week. The manufacturers of that town formed a Union for protection, and when a few of the smaller manufacturers were disposed to yield to the strikers, and pay the price demanded, they were held to their obligation by the other manufacturers, in the same manner that the weak-kneed strikers are held up by the leaders in a strike. But because of this, the labor organs cry "bull-dozing," and claim that for "sublime assurance the Marblehead manufacturers carry off the palm," when this is exactly what is done by the strikers, and has been done through the entire trouble. There are many laborers in every such time who are disposed, after a few weeks' of idleness, to go to work, and make their own terms in their own way for their labor. But is this allowed? The men are told by the leaders of the Union when to quit work, and when to resume, and if they are members of the Union they must submit. A violation of this principle would end any strike and the "rights of labor" could never be vindicated. But strange to say, this is a rule that only works one way. When the manufacturers attempt to carry out the very same principle, and because a few who are disposed to yield are held to their agreement, it is "monopoly," "bull-dozing," and "tyranny." Herein lies the grandeur of the glorious labor reform movement.

It is said to be a fact that in certain quarters the question of Ex-Gov. Gaston as the next Republican nominee for Governor is being quietly talked over. What a solemn thing such a nomination would be!—Milford Journal.

It would be solemn enough for Butler, surely. Republican votes elected William Gaston once; if the party desire to support him again, Gen. Butler would be routed horse, foot and dragoons.

The Salem Antique and Horrible Committee extends a cordial invitation to all out of town parties who wish to participate in the parade on the morning of the Fourth. All such, wishing to compete for the prizes, should send their names as soon as possible to the Secretary, Mr. Orrin Carey. The prizes are as follows:—1st prize, $20 in gold; 2d, $15 in gold; 3d, $10 in gold; 4th, $5 in gold. E. Warren Nichols, Treasurer of the Committee.

Anybody who will suggest to Gov. Butler a practicable method of removing Mrs. Clara T. Leonard from the board of health, lunacy and charity will earn the old man's lasting gratitude. There is too much cold truth in her letters showing the falsity of the Governor's charges concerning the Tewsbury almshouse to be altogether pleasant to His Excellency.—Palmer Journal.

The business of the Lynn Horse Railroad is enormous for this time in the season, and it really looks as though the company would be obliged to still further increase their equipment, in order to keep up with it. President Breed is to be felicitated upon the remarkable success of his management.—Lynn Union.

We desire our readers to note that E. & C. Woodman, of Danvers, have a large and fine stock of cabbage, cauliflower, and celery plants, which they will sell at low prices. They are of the best varieties and our readers will make no mistake, but will consult their best interest by ordering of Messrs. Woodman what they may desire in this line.

The mammoth establishment of W. B. Gifford & Co., of Lynn, dealers in dry goods, carpets, paper hangings, etc., must have attracted the notice of our readers who have visited Market street. Some of their bargains are noted in our advertising columns, and the attention of our readers is directed thereto.

The Madison Square theatre of New York City, has a set of patrons peculiarly its own. The beauty of the house and its admirable system of ventilation by means of iced air go far to account for continued prosperity. Strangers invariably visit the theatre.

Previous to taking account of stock the Naumkeag Clothing Co. will sell their entire stock at prices that will challenge comparison with those of any other dealers. No prices are made for the benefit of other houses, but the public are invited to examine the goods and compare prices.

The Ipswich Chronicle says: I. Wyman Bartlett, who took charge of the Oak Island telegraph office, last Monday, has been promoted to day operator at Peabody.

T. F. Swan, No. 12 Cornhill, Boston, is now offering a large stock of the latest style paper hangings at retail, at very low rates. If you want a neat paper for a little money, call as above.

The Odd Fellows of Salem propose erecting a memorial on their lot in the Orne-street Cemetery. It will cost about $1000. The committee have received a handsome design from Burlington, Vt.

The Selectmen of Amesbury have prohibited the sale of toy pistols, toy cannon and all other articles in which explosive compounds of any kind are used.

C. S. Goodridge, 63 Market Street, Lynn, will furnish you with a manilla, panama, straw, soft or stiff hat at a low figure. Call and see him.

Following the essays of the graduating class, will be found an account of the great sale of Wellman Osborne, Lynn, on the third page.

Several horses were frightened the other day by the large hand-bills of the circus, that were distributed on the street.

Probably the best piece of herds grass in town is on the "six acre" lot of Mr. James Marsh's farm, near his residence.

The schools close to-morrow and commence again on Monday, Sept. 3d, giving the pupils and teachers nine weeks vacation.

The failure of Miss Helen L. Osborn at Kansas City, Mo., is reported, and also the disposal of her stock at a sheriff's sale.

James Buckley of Peabody had the third finger of his left hand crushed in a moulding machine at Salem, last Monday.

Thousands of people have yet to learn that to cut lettuce is to destroy its tenderness, and to put sugar on it is to ruin it.

Dose the pesky potato bugs with plentiful paris green baptisms, and delay not. Procrastination is the oasis of the varmints.

The examination of pupils for admission to the high school, will take place at the high school building to-morrow, (Friday).

Several small articles were stolen from a clothes line on Central street last Thursday night. Look out for clothes line thieves.

We learn that Mrs. E. P. Underhill, assistant in the High school, has recently declined a very lucrative situation offered her at Fitchburg.

During a fight between two boys on the town house lot, last Thursday, one severely bit his companion on the cheek, drawing blood.

They have got so now that they put a red border around the dish-cloths and decorate the center with Swiss scenery equal to steel engravings.

A team belonging to F. A. Bragdon became heated on Walnut street, Monday, caused by the varnish running down and heating the axle.

The petition to have the Selectmen close the barber shops on Sunday, which had been numerously signed, was not presented to that body.

Summer began according to calendar last Thursday afternoon at 1.55, and will continue from that time for 93 days 14 hours and 29 minutes.

Before you go out of town for your summer vacation, arrange for all the home news to reach you, weekly, by subscribing for the PRESS.

We are pleased to see the familiar face of Mr. D. A. Caskin again about his business, after an absence of several weeks, caused by sickness.

Mr. Henry C. Wilson killed a large checkered adder snake on the road leading to Frank Marsh's last Friday, that measured over three feet in length.

Seventy-three cars, the most of them loaded, were counted on the side tracks of the different railroads one morning last week. Twenty-eight were bark cars.

A four year old son of Daniel Thompson was struck in the face by a bat, in the hands of a larger boy on Lowel street, last Friday, and considerably injured.

It was a little rough on a local bicyclist, who struck his bell on an off-road the other day, and was hailed with, "Say, what's your price for grinding scissors?"

The libel case against the Salem Evening News has been decided in favor of the paper on a demurrer, the judge holding that the article was not libelous.

We learn that Miss Sarah J. C. Needham, who for the past year has been first assistant in the East Kentucky Normal School, in Cattlesburg, Ky., has been offered $1000 a year to return to that institution, but on account of family ties, she has concluded not to accept, and will remain in this vicinity.

The cars for Nahant Beach on the Lynn horse railroad, will leave the Eastern railroad station, Lynn, every ten minutes. No extra charge from Peabody.

Mr. Isaac W. Bartlett of Ipswich has been appointed telegraph operator and clerk at the E. R. R. station. Mr. Fasset will have charge of the freight yard and the tickets.

That "trundle bed trash" that stood in front of a store on Main street last Saturday evening, and insulted little girls, had better mind their business in future, or they will get into trouble.

The Selectmen have decided that a telephone pole in front of the Warren National Bank would not improve the appearance of Main street, and have refused permission to have one placed there.

One would naturally think that the owner of an orchard, whose trees look as if a fire had run through them, would be ashamed of it when fifty cents worth of ink, and a little labor would have saved them.

The descendants of Rebecca Nourse, who was executed in Salem in 1692, in consequence of the witchcraft delusion, propose holding a basket picnic on Wednesday, July 18, at the old homestead at Tapleyville.

N. P. Merriam is having built at his coal yard at the Port a barge of 220 tons burden, to be used in lightening vessels in the river, and for use along the coast in connection with a tug.—Danvers Mirror.

Machinists from Boston overhauled Steamer 2 Tuesday, calking it around the flues, where it had been leaking. The boiler itself has seen about all the service it was designed for it when it was made.

A horse attached to a stone drag, belonging to Wm. Hayes, became contrary while standing on the Square last Monday, and commenced to kick, injuring himself somewhat before he could be pacified.

Picture Frames for Engravings and Oil Paintings made to order. We have also on hand a fine assortment of Engravings at Low Prices. Smith & Robinson, 42 Market street, Lynn. Successors to S. A. Barton.

Miss Julia P. Wilkins, first assistant in the Centre School, has received from her class a gift of an elegant gold thimble. Also, Miss Merrill of the Centre, has received from her class a pocket-book and a volume of poems.

It is said that the larger part of the brick work that will support the spire to the new Catholic church, will have to be taken down and rebuilt, before the spire is put up, as the work was not properly done in the first place.

Miss Abbie D. Esty, teacher of the fourth class of the Wallis school, has resigned. She was presented by her class last Wednesday with a set of Hawthorne's works in four volumes and also a mounted picture of St. Cerilia.

Our local ball player, Saml. W. King, a member of the Danvers nine, did some fine playing at the Danvers riding park last Saturday, in the contest with Brown, Durrell & Co's nine of Boston. The Danvers nine play the Stars of Beverly on July 4th.

It is estimated that about one thousand persons occupied the new waiting rooms of the Horse Railroad last Sabbath at different times, previous to the departure of the cars. This shows at once the desirability of such a convenience for the public.

A band of street musicians, who played remarkably well, gave a concert at SteveCragan's saloon on Foster street last Friday evening. The band consists of two violins, a harp and a flute, and have been engaged during the winter at Miller's shooting gallery at Boston.

A well known gentleman who recently started in the carriage business, it is said, mistook a box of fair sized tomatoes at Buxton's provision store for strawberries, and congratulated the proprietor on having the largest in town. He should have been given a box to sample.

A boat containing Joseph Grey of this town, and two other companions, capsized near Beverly bridge last Sunday. Grey being unable to swim, had a narrow escape, but he clung to the bottom of the boat, until he managed to reach one of the piers of the bridge, which he held to until rescued.

Now returneth the irrepressible "small boy" from his day's play at the beach, with a suspicious moisture lingering around his hair, and shirt on hind-side before, and explaineth to his mother that he hath not been in swimming, and that he must have worn his shirt that way all the week.

Three car loads of emigrants passed over the Eastern Railroad last Saturday. They were all huddled together, the men smoking and children eating bread and butter, and all looking happy in anticipation of their home in this land, where cruel landlords are (we were going to say unknown) not very numerous.

Strawberries fresh every day—and all kinds of fruit at George Stevens'.

MESSRS. EDITORS,—The item in the last issue of your paper, in reference to an alleged haunted house in the vicinity of Jacobs street, besides being utterly false, is calculated to do a great deal of harm to the owner of said house, inasmuch as such a report, if allowed to go the rounds without a denial, will be apt to make an unfavorable impression on tenants who may come hereafter. Upon making a thorough investigation of the case, it is found that the only foundation for the ghost story is a dream and excessive rum-drinking. A woman had a dream and was superstitious enough to believe in it, and two drunken men, the one alarmed by the ravings of the other, mistaking the alcoholic spirit for the supernatural, declared the existence of a ghost. Men in a state of delirium imagine many things which no one of sane mind would credit, and a report coming from such people should be taken at a discount at best. The whole proceeding is rather unfortunate as it tends to reflect on the house in question and on the locality. The place has generally borne the reputation of peace and quietude and the "still hours of night" have never been disturbed, save by the drunken midnight brawling of certain parties who figured most prominently in circulating this story. These are the facts in the case and it is hoped that as you published the ghostly part of the story you will have the goodness to make public that which is real.

TO THE PUBLIC!

We have always possessed the idea that the poor man's hard earned dollar should purchase just as much as a like amount of his wealthy neighbor.—WE BELIEVE IT. WE ACT UPON IT. Three years ago it was hard to convince customers that a firm in the FURNITURE business would or could make such a departure. WE DID, and our business to-day is a pleasing monument of its kindly reception by the people of Lynn, Swampscott, Saugus, Nahant, Marblehead, Peabody, Danvers, Lynnfield, Salem, &c., to whom we are more than thankful.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

Last Sabbath morning was observed as Children's Sunday at the Universalist church. There was no attempt at an elaborate floral display, but there was an abundance of flowers around the altar, and a goodly congregation, in which the little ones were conspicuous, had gathered. The singing was appropriate to the occasion rendered by the choir of the church, a solo "Beautiful Flowers of Spring," being finely sung by Miss Hutchinson the soprano. Rev. Mr. Sprague delivered a sermon to the children taking for a text, Luke 2:40, "And the child grew and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom." The pastor feelingly referred to the day as one set apart for the religious profit of the children. He would be glad to see as many children at the service of the church every Sunday. It was a fitting expression of the love manifested by our Lord towards the little ones. His remarks to the children would be on the subject of growing. All present were interested to grow up and become men and women. They were to grow strong (1) in body, and in order to attain this they needed to eat moderately and have abundant exercise in the open air. They should strive to attain this strength by abundant exercise and care. They were also to grow strong (2) in mind. This they could attain by attention to their studies. They could never learn too much. Jesus not only grew in stature but in wisdom. They were also to grow in (3) spirit. They should learn to have trust in God and the right, and grow stronger in this trust. They will have sad disappointments and unexpected troubles in the future, and if not strong in faith and in spirit there will be reason for sadness. God has given us parents, friends, health and every outward blessing. Does not this show that He loves us? We should learn to trust in Him at all times. Strength of body will not make us happy, nor strength of mind. Nor the two combined, unless we have the strength of the Spirit. The growth of the Christian Spirit in the world lies in the interest manifest towards the young. The pastor urged more attention to the teaching of religious truth in the homes—supplementing the work of the Sabbath School. He would have them trained up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Fill their minds with good things and they will be weighted and inclined to live good, useful, honorable and peaceful lives. At the close of the sermon three young children were christened by Rev. Mr. Sprague, a daughter of Wm. E. Francis, and sons of Milo McNeil and Charles G. Goldthwait.

Mr. James M. Ward, the florist on Endicott street, has in his possession a bible that is a rare curiosity. It is printed in old English in the year 1584, and notwithstanding its age is in an excellent state of preservation. The first part of the book is divided into different subjects with a service for each, such as communion, ministration of baptism, confirmation, matrimony, etc., also prayers for each day in the week. There are 555 pages, which includes the old and new testament. The Psalms are in the first part of the book by themselves, and are prefixed with the following heading: "Psalms of David of that translation which is commonly used in the churches;" and they are written in blank verse. All through the book there are notes or references on the sides of verses referring to corresponding verses in different books of the bible. In the last part of the book there is a preface written in 1578, followed by alphabetical directions to common places, containing all the Hebrew, Chaldean, Greek, Latin or other strange names dispersed through the whole work. There are also several English cuts and figures in different parts of the work. The following is the title page of the New Testament:

The Thirteenth Regiment Mass. Vols. Association, will hold its annual reunion on Friday, June 29, at Marlboro, Mass., when the Association will be the guests of Companies F, I, and the Regimental Band. Mr. Chas. H. Fernald, of this office, being a member, will attend.

Last Sunday evening Mrs. Nellie H. Bayley of Chicago, gave a very interesting talk to the children of the different Sabbath Schools in town, at the vestry of the South Church, on the subject of temperance. Mrs. Bayley's work in this cause is juvenile work, and she certainly possesses the faculty of interesting the young. Her anecdotes were illustrated by prepared charts, including some drawings as she proceeded. She has had much success in the West in this line, and the older people as well as the young, were given something to remember in her speaking. The lecture was interspersed with singing by some young misses of the Sabbath School.

Another who heard Mrs. Bayley, says: When we reflect that in the fifty or more sermons the children hear during the year, there is scarcely a crumb for them, we cannot wonder that such object lessons as Mrs. Bayley presented, interested them deeply, bringing truth within their comprehension; and we were not surprised to hear the little ones as they passed out of the Vestry, saying, "wasn't that nice!" "isn't she splendid?" "can't she come again?" In many a household the next day, the "Beulah-land" picture was talked over; and also the web which drink weaves around its victims. Our hearts devoutly thanked God for conferring upon a woman such a rare gift of teaching truth by the "Chalk Talk" upon the canvas.

A horse belonging to Warren P. Flint of North Reading, became frightened at the cars, while standing on the square, Tuesday morning. The driver, Charles Flint, a son of the owner, had taken off the horse's bridle to feed him from a box on the ground, leaving him unsecured. The boy was sitting on the seat, when the horse started, and dashed around the corner near the South church at a furious rate. The boy kept his seat until near the Lawrence track, when he jumped from the side of the wagon, but strange to say, was not injured in the least. The horse proceeded up Central to Jacobs street. In turning the corner of Jacobs street, the wagon was overturned and thrown against the fence of Mr. Cleaves K. Hutchinson, depositing a number of eggs and other articles that the wagon contained, in a confused mass on the ground. The animal proceeded with the forward wheels of the wagon, and had not gone far, when he struck the milk wagon of N. R. Welch, springing an axle and breaking the perch. Continuing, he ran into the yard of Lyman Nichols and stopped.

Mr. Daniel F. Leavitt, a former resident of this town, died at New York City last Saturday afternoon of malarial fever at the age of forty-seven years. His remains were brought to this town last Monday morning to be viewed by relatives and friends and Wednesday morning removed to West Stockbridge, Mass., for burial. The deceased was a son of Mrs. Benjamin Huntington of this town and was well known by our townspeople. He enlisted as assistant surgeon in the 41st Regiment, M. V. M., (afterwards the 32d cavalry,) October 31, 1862, at the age of 21 years, and March 19, 1864, was promoted to the position of surgeon, receiving his discharge at the close of the war, July 21, 1865. He was elected on the School Board in this town in 1868 for three years and was chairman of the board during the time. In 1870 he removed to New York City, where he has since remained in the practice of his profession. He was a graduate of Williams College and of the Harvard Medical School, and previous to residing in this town he taught school in the South. He leaves a mother and sister to mourn his loss.

A new law that goes into effect July first, provides that "No child under ten years of age shall be employed in any manufacturing, mechanical or mercantile establishment in this Commonwealth; and no child under twelve years of age shall be so employed during the hours in which the public schools are in session in the city or town in which he resides. Any parent or guardian who permits such employment shall for such offence forfeit not less than twenty nor more than fifty dollars for the use of the public schools of the city or town." Truant officer, S. F. Reed, will enforce the above.

The strawberry festival and literary entertainment at the Methodist Church, Tuesday evening, was a most enjoyable occasion. A goodly company of all ages was present. The musical and literary programme was executed with fine effect. Words of welcome were spoken by the Pastor, when an hour was spent socially, and in discussing strawberries, ice cream, etc., in which all participated with a relish. Social occasions like that of Tuesday evening, can but be religiously healthful in their influence.

Here's the way they address letters to the principal municipal officers of a neighboring town, "Slack Men's Room, Woburn." No wonder Woburn wants to be a city.—Wakefield Citizen.

So. Peabody.—Rev. Mr. Childs, of Byfield, occupied the pulpit at the church last Sabbath. In the evening Mr. Ames, of the bible society of Boston, made some interesting remarks.

The Horse Railroad Co. still continues to do a very large business, especially on Sunday. The company have exchanged the running trips of all the drivers and conductors, that is they are not given any particular route, but run wherever sent.

Chas. M. Merrow purchased the estate of the late Betsey Bowers, sold at auction last Saturday, for $853. The personal property also brought a very good price.

S. C. Bancroft is having a piazza built on to his house on Marsh street.

Mr. Frank Lewis, one of the conductors on the Lynn Horse Railroad, lost some $4.25 worth of tickets last Sunday. Charlie Basford also lost about $6 worth, but afterwards found them near the ice houses.

The many friends of Mrs. David Putnam on Lynnfield street, tendered her a birthday party last Monday afternoon and evening. There was a large company present, and all wished the hostess many happy returns.

That the items under the head of So. Peabody may be even more numerous and interesting, every one in possession of any item of a local nature, will confer a favor by leaving it at the store of W. E. Reed. This invitation is intended for you.

A large rattlesnake was killed last Saturday, near the house of Hiram Bryant, having five rattles. Rattlesnakes are not uncommon in that vicinity, and more or less are killed every year.

One night last week as one of the tip carts was returning from work, some half dozen "brawny fisted sons of toil" climbed in and seated themselves in the bottom of the cart, and began to peacefully smoke their T. D's., dreaming that it was Saturday night and they had tried all the week to kill time while the boss was off, and other things of great moment, when suddenly the bolt which holds the body of the cart down, slipped and spilled them out, dinner pails, shovels, T. D. pipes and all. While the old horse unconscious of his loss continued on his homeward way until stopped by one of the victims who had recovered.

Mr. Daniel R. Davis had a paralytic shock last Sunday, and is still seriously ailing.

Personal.—Jacob Osborn and wife and Miss Maria Osborn were registered at Scarell's Hotel, Cottage City, last week.

Mr. Charles Pierce, a Peabody boy, is home on a visit to his parents who live in Salem. He belongs to the training ship Saratoga, of the U. S. Navy.

Mr. Irvin Besse of Newburyport, spent Sunday in town.

Stephen A. Osborne and family are occupying their cottage at the Willows.

Mrs. Joseph H. Swett left town Tuesday for a vacation in Maine.

Mr. Thomas E. Proctor is occupying his new cottage at Beverly Farms.

Mrs. J. E. Clement is stopping with Mrs. Eliza Sutton at Center Harbor, N. H.

Dr. Geo. S. Osborne and family returned from their California trip last Saturday night.

Prof. Henry Frye of New York was in town last Monday.

Miss Mary L. Smith formerly of this town, but now a teacher in the schools at Washington, D. C., will spend her vacation with her parents at Putnamville, Danvers.

Miss Sarah J. C. Needham, formerly assistant of the Peabody High School, is in town.

Mr. Edgar W. Upton will occupy Chas. D. Howard's summer residence, at Marblehead Neck, during the summer.

Luther C. Hanson, who recently went west, has arrived home.

Francis H. Appleton is occupying his summer residence at West Peabody.

Penalty for Sin.—June 21, Patrick Sweeney, second drunk, sent to Salem Jail for 2 months.

John Keefe, of Dedham, drunk, $5.83. Sent to Salem Jail.

John Nagle, drunk, $5.83.

25, Frank McConville of Boston, drunk, $5.83. Sent to Salem Jail.

Wm. A. McKenney, drunk, $5.83. Sent to Salem Jail.

James Mallen, drunk, $5.83.

James Hartnett of Beverly, drunk, $5.83. Sent to Salem Jail.

Eddie C., son of Mr. Albert Woodbury, who has been suffering from an attack of acute mania, was taken to the Danvers Insane Asylum yesterday, where he will receive skillful treatment. This is a particularly sad case, as it is reported that the trouble was superinduced by a visit to a dental office, where he was strapped into a chair and a dose of ether administered that a tooth might be extracted. The dentist is not blamed in the matter, as he followed instructions.

HAY-FEVER

has gained an enviable reputation wherever known, displacing all other preparations.—An article of undoubted merit.

CURES

ROSE COLD,
Cold in the Head,
HAY FEVER,
Is not a liquid or snuff.

Apply by the finger into the nostrils.—When absorbed it effectually cleanses the nasal passages of virus, causing healthy secretions. It allays inflamation, protects the membranal linings of the head from additional colds, completely heals the sores and restores the sense of taste and smell. Beneficial results are realized by a few applications. A thorough treatment will cure. Send for circular. By mail, prepaid, 50c.—stamps received. Sold by all druggists.

HIS OPINION.

IN CLEAR SENTENCES AN AUTHORITY ADDS HIS OWN TO THE POPULAR JUDGMENT.

191 West Tenth Street,
New York, Aug. 11, 1880.

MESSRS. SEABURY & JOHNSON:

I am slow to pin my faith to any new curative agent. BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER has won my good opinion. I find it an exceptionally cleanly plaster to use and rapid in its action. Many tests of its qualities in my own family, and among my patients, have convinced me that there is no other single article so valuable for popular use, none so helpful in cases of Lame Back, Local Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Congestion of the Bronchial Tubes and Lungs and Lumbago. You may feel free to use my name. Very truly yours,
H. H. KANE, M. D.,
Physician-in-Chief of the De Quincy Home.
Price of the CAPCINE 25 cents.

Miscellaneous.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS.—Do not neglect to put on a pair of gloves before beginning to sweep, if you wish to keep the hands soft and smooth.

It is said that a handful of hay in a bucket of water, placed in a room recently painted, is effectual in removing the disagreeable odor of the paint.

A small heated bar of iron, applied to the head of a rusted screw, will render its withdrawal as easy as one just inserted.

A teaspoonful of charcoal taken in a glass of hot water is often effectual in curing sick headache.

Liver should be placed in hot water before cooking, after being sliced thin, and then broiled or fried.

It is stated that half a cup of vinegar in the water will make an old fowl cook nearly as quickly as a young one, and does not injure the flavor. The vessel in which it is cooked should be of material that vinegar will not affect.

Farmers are sure to have a busy time for the next month, for they find that not only is this warm weather excellent for corn but it proves a perfect opportunity for the weeds. Those who have gardens also will find this the month when they will require attention. An agricultural exchange says that "later plantings of sweet corn and peas should be made every week during the month. Beans, whether to be used this month or ripened for winter, will do better planted this month than earlier, as they require abundant warmth. Lettuce for a late crop, cabbages, cauliflowers, celery and tomatoes may be put in at any time during the month. Spinach to succeed the early crops, dandelions for next year, beets for winter and turnips also may be sown."

BOATS, BICYCLES AND HAY FEVER.—Nature has resolved that all the people shall not enjoy themselves at once. With the opening of the season of outdoor sports comes the time of trouble for the poor victims of Hay Fever. For them flowers have no odor, and the summer little or no beauty. To snuff, sneeze and wipe their weeping eyes for three or four successive months:—this is their pitiable portion. Whether this form of catarrh is called hay-fever, hay-cold, rose-cold or rose-fever, makes no difference; they suffer just the same. There is no help in sea-voyages, there is no help in high mountain air. These only lighten the pocket and leave the disease unabated. But there is a positive cure in Ely's Cream Balm. We could cram these columns with grateful letters of the rescued. Try it and join them. If you continue to suffer it is because you neglect a remedy as sure as it is cheap and pleasant.

A novel sight yesterday was that of a mother boxing the ears of her son, a manacled prisoner, as he was being led to prison from the Court of General Sessions, where he had been convicted of assaulting a policeman. The son had almost arrived at manhood, and when his mother who, it appears had tried to bring up her boy in the way, in which he should go, saw him reflecting discredit upon his parents, she could not restrain her hand. Possibly there would not be so much work for the criminal courts if mothers made a practice of publicly chastising their sons who become law breakers.—N. Y. Sun.

A GENERAL STAMPEDE.

Never was such a rush made for any Drug Store as is now at Spaulding's for a Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. All persons affected with Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, can get a Trial Bottle of this great remedy free, by calling at the above Drug Store.

The present strawberry season is a remarkable one. The berries are unusually abundant and nice in quality. The price, too, is cheaper than ordinarily attends their sale so early in the season. To the quick railroad connections between Maryland and Boston, the strawberry-loving public are indebted for such fine fruit and moderate prices.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

Ananias had a very bad reputation, but it can be said to his credit that he never wrote a circus circular.—Philadelphia Chronicle.

"Lemmy, you're a pig!" said a father to his son, who was five years old. "Now, do you know what a pig is, Lemmy?" "Yes, sir—pig is a hog's little boy."

TALMAGE ON HUSKING.

EARS OF CORN THAT DON'T MIND IT, AND OTHERS THAT DO.

"My hearers," shouted Rev. Dr. Talmage from his pulpit in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, on a bright Sunday morning last November, "going at the rate of forty miles an hour last Wednesday, I got this sermon on husking. God has arranged that the ear and the husk shall be parted. Every rheumatic pain is but a thrust of the husking-peg: every neuralgic twinge is only a twist of the husker. Thus he takes away what hinders your soul's liberation."

Poetry is permitted to preachers; but the fact is, nobody wants to be husked, nor does any one believe that the body is to the soul what the husk is to the corn. On the other hand, Nature teaches us to fight this husking process. Hence most people are thankful for whatever can abate those "rheumatic pains" and "neuralgic twinges."

That, at least, was the view taken of the subject by M. Alfred Baer, a French gentleman, who, at his pleasant home, Greenmont, near Sing Sing, N. Y., said, the other day, to a reporter:

"My life has at times been rendered almost intolerable by Rheumatism. I had tried different remedies without result. But PARKER'S GINGER TONIC gave me great satisfaction. You may tell Messieurs Hiscox & Co., of New York—the proprietors—that I certify to its perfect efficacy, as the Tonic has completely restored my health. Please say, also, that they are welcome to use my name, and ask them to accept my thanks," added the courteous Parisian.

Rheumatism is a symptom of kidney disease, not an affection of the joints or muscles. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC purifies the Blood, and acts with a success beyond that of all other preparations in cases of Dyspepsia, Liver, Kidney and Stomach disorders, and in common Coughs and Colds. Prices, 50 cents and $1 per bottle. The latter the more economical.

STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE. — Now that strawberries are in the market and becoming plentiful, the following receipt for making strawberry shortcake will no doubt be acceptable to many housekeepers: "One quart of flour, two heaping teaspoonfuls of yeast powder, half a teaspoonful of salt, butter size of an egg, milk, two quarts strawberries. Mix the baking powder into the flour by sifting all together; then rub in the butter. Add enough milk to make a soft dough—rather softer than for biscuit. Spread this on two pie tins. Bake in a quick oven. When the cakes are done, let them partly cool. Cut around the edges, and split them. Spread them with butter, then with one quart of mashed strawberries, with plenty of sugar. Serve a pitcher of cream with a strawberry shortcake. It is a good summer breakfast, as well as tea, dish. These cakes are equally nice with currants, blackberries, cut peaches, chopped pineapple or raspberries."

The "Country Week," conducted by the Boston Young Men's Christian Union, has given, since its inauguration in 1878, eight thousand five hundred of the poor children of the city the pleasure of a ten days' visit in the country in summer, a pleasure which they could not otherwise have enjoyed. Work for the present season has already commenced. The children are ready, the homes are wanted. If you are willing to invite one or more children to visit in your home during the summer, address Miss Ellen H. Bailey, Secretary, 18 Boylston Street, Boston, who will furnish any further information desired. Fares will be paid by the Committee.

PETERSON'S MAGAZINE is on our table early this month, as usual, and is filled with choice, entertaining reading matter and illustrations. There are nearly fifty wood engravings of fashions, embroidery, etc. Terms $2.00 per year. Specimens gratis to those desiring to get up clubs. Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Jeff Davis is said to be failing very fast of late. His hair is very white, and he has the appearance of a feeble, wan, bent old man. His wife, however, is a fat, hale, hearty lady, who watches over him as she would a child. When out driving she handles the ribbons, while he sits with drooping head, scarcely noticing anything unless his attention is called to it.

CANADIAN BAZAAR.—Mr. John Osborne, Musical Bazaar, Toronto, Canada, writes that his wife was cured of rheumatism by the great pain-banisher, St. Jacobs Oil; that he has found it an invaluable remedy for many ailments.

The Oak Hill House, at Littleton, N. H., Mr. George Farr, proprietor, has had its accommodations increased since last season. Rooms have already been engaged by Dr. A. C. Webber and family of Cambridge; H. M. Adams and family, New York; Mr. S. L. Gery and family, Miss C. M. Post, Boston, and others.

The German element in this country is numerically stronger than the Irish. The Germans largely populate the west and are mostly farmers while the Irish congregate in cities and manufacturing towns where their numbers are more concentrated. Hence arises a mistaken popular idea that the Irish predominate.

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is

HEYLINGBERG'S

EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.
Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.
Mr. J. J. Heylingberg, Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,
FRANK A. BRAGDON.
Many more testimonials furnished if desired.
Persons suffering from diseases of the scalp will be attended at the house when desired.

KIDNEY AND BLADDER COMPLAINTS OF MANY YEARS DURATION—HIS WORD GOOD AS GOLD—CASE OF CITY ASSESSOR FRANCIS GOMARD, 89 SUMNER STREET, LOWELL, MASS.

"His word is as good as a bank note at any bank in Lowell, and I know it." was the opinion of a well known citizen in speaking of City Assessor Francis Gomard. Your reporter found Mr. Gomard at his pleasant home, which, with many others, adorns Sumner street and fronts the charming park of South Common. Mr. Gomard said, "I had been, as many of my friends in Lowell know, a great sufferer from kidney and urinary troubles for a long time. My physician said it was the result of diseased kidneys and enlargement of the prostate gland. I had suffered terribly, and although my doctor's treatment had been the best which this city afforded, I got no better. I said finally, 'Doctor, it's no use. You have done all that is in your power to do, I know that; but I must get help from some other source or die.' Finally I was induced to try Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, a medicine which had been recommended very highly for kidney diseases. I received help at once. It has acted like a charm with me. Why so? Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is an honest preparation, and I know it. I didn't think anything would help me, but this has given me better health than any medicine ever prescribed for me. I have recommended it to ever so many of my friends in the city of Lowell, and with the same result. They think there is nothing like Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY."

What Mr. Gomard says can be depended upon, as any one acquainted with the gentleman knows.

COUNTY COMM'RS' NOTICE.

Peabody, April 19th, 1883.

To the Honorable Board of County Commissioners for the county of Essex.

The undersigned respectfully represent that the public convenience and necessity require that that part of Aborn street, in Peabody, between the residence of the late William Sutton and the corner of Aborn and Sutton streets, should be widened and straightened.

We therefore petition your honorable body to view the premises and to take such action in the matter as the public convenience and necessity may seem to you to require.

GEO. C. PIERCE and others.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Essex, ss.

Court of County Commissioners, April Term, A D. 1883, held by adjournment at Salem, in said county.

On the Petition aforesaid, ordered, That said petitioners give notice to all persons and corporations interested therein, that said Commissioners will meet at Sutton's Wool Shop, in said Peabody, on Monday the ninth day of July next, at one and one half o'clock, P. M.—by publishing an attested copy of said Petition, and of this Order thereon, in the Peabody Press, a newspaper printed in Peabody, three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before the said ninth day of July. And also by serving the Town Clerk of Peabody with an attested copy of said Petition and this Order, thirty days at least, and by posting up an attested copy thereof in two public places in said town, fourteen days at least before the said ninth day of July, at which time and place said Commissioners will proceed to view the premises, and take such order in relation to the Prayer of said Petition, as by law they may be authorized to do.

ALFRED A. ABBOTT, Clerk.

A true copy of Petition and Order thereon.

Attest,
ALFRED A. ABBOTT, Clerk.

Miscellaneous.

He Wants to Join the Band.

There is a time in the life of every young man when he has an ambition to belong to a brass band, and he never rests contented until he has borrowed or owns a brass horn. A boy goes to a county fair and sees a band, hired from a neighboring town, and each member of the band is a hero in the eye of the boy. He sees the blue coats, with gold lace, the epaulets, the cap, with its musical frontpiece, and the yellow stripe down the trousers, and he resolves to learn to play a horn. He sees the crowd collect around the band-stand as the band plays a tune, and notice the snare drummer cock his hat on one side of his head and look at all the girls, and the young man is most inclined to learn to play the drum instead of the horn, as he argues that playing the drum gives one a better opportunity to look around; but when he reflects that it only takes muscle to play the drum, and that it requires brain and wind to play a horn, he decides on a horn. And when the band is marched off to the dining hall at the fair and given a place at the head of the table, near the orator of the day, who has his oration in his pocket and is afraid he will lose it, and sees the crowd collect around the band, his mind is made up more firmly than ever to play a horn.

He goes home and dreams of the band, and the next day he goes to work and sells a calf, or takes some of the money he earned harvesting, and buys a brass horn and a book of notes that he does not know the name of. He has been to singing school, and can read singing notes but horn notes are too rich for his blood. He does not tell his family what he has done, but smuggles his horn into the barn and when he has got the milking done, and fed the stock, he goes out to the barn and gets into the hay mow and feels of the keys. He finally musters up courage to blow gently into the horn, and he hears a noise that is a cross between the squeal of a pig caught under a gate and the bellow of a cow that smells blood and paws the turf and looks sassy in the pasture. He blows gently until he has got so he can make a straight noise that does not split up the back and go out of the instrument both ways, and the folks in the house begin to hear it. Then he concludes that he will see how much the instrument will stand, and he draws in his breath and blows for all that is out, and as the discordant "bla-a-t" goes out upon the stifling air of the hay mow, and he feels a sensation at the butt of the ears that makes him think a mule has kicked him, and he hears the horses down stairs kicking in the stalls, and the cows are lowing as though they had heard bad news, and the faithful dog that he has left out doors, begins to howl as though there was going to be a death in the family.

Then the beginner begins to realize that he is making a sensation, and he looks out of a crack in the barn towards the house and he sees his mother standing on the porch with her apron over her head looking at the barn as though it was on fire, the hired man, who is pumping water, stops with the pump handle in the air, and he sees his father in his shirt sleeves, pick up an ax handle and start for the barn, spitting on his hands and looking savage. He sees a neighbor who is driving by, stop his team at the house, ask if there is anybody sick and he realizes that it is impossible to keep his secret longer, and he comes down out of the hay mow with his brass horn under his arm, sheepish, and confesses to his outraged family that he is learning to play a horn so he can join the band. His father tells him he is a blasted fool, but his mother and sister take his part, and argue that it will be a great honor to have him wear brigadier general's clothes in the band, and the matter is compromised by allowing him to practise on his horn out in the south lot, and for a week or two, at intervals, mournful sounds are heard from that direction, and then they suddenly cease, and when the father finally asks the boy how he is progressing as hornist, he tells his parent that he has traded off his horn for a fiddle or an accordeon, and explains, by showing his upper lip, which is swelled up to twice its natural size, that he is not cut out for playing a wind instrument.

That horn will be traded all over the neighborhood, and will finally be found in a garret, jammed out of shape, and the brass band fever will have passed away. Among the greatest failures of the world there are none that are sadder than the failure of a boy to learn to play a brass horn.—Milwaukee Sun.

CHARLES MASON Commis'r of Patents."

"Inventors cannot employ a person more trustworthy or more capable of securing for them an early and favorable consideration at the Patent Office.
EDMUND BURKE,
Late Commissioner of Patents."

"Boston, October 19, 1870.

R. H. EDDY, ESQ.—Dear Sir: You procured for me, in 1840, my first patent. Since then you have acted for and advised me in hundreds of cases, and procured many patents, reissues and extensions. I have occasionally employed the best agencies in New York, Philadelphia and Washington, but I still give you almost the whole of my business, in your line, and advise others to employ you.

Yours Truly, GEORGE DRAPER."

If you want an Eddy Refrigerator the place to buy one cheap is at the L. A. May Company, 137 Union street, Lynn.

The scholars of the Bowditch school, accompanied by their teachers, held a picnic at Brown's Grove, Summit street, yesterday afternoon. A pleasant time was enjoyed.

John E. Webster and John B. Mahoney of this town, were examined for admission to Harvard Medical School. The result of the examination will not be known until next week.

The stage of the Peabody Institute was finely decorated with flowers and potted plants for the exercises of this afternoon. The potted plants came from the greenhouse of Mrs. J. B. Clement.

There seems to be a disease among cows in this vicinity—several of them being affected. The cow is taken suddenly lame, the foot swells, and it is almost impossible to use it. The cause s unknown but after a while the cow gets better.

Mr. Ezra H. Shannon, the popular clerk at Collins' cigar store, was united in marriage last Thursday evening to Mrs. Wilhelmina Pratt. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. W. Sprague of the Universalist church. We tender congratulations.

Yesterday the Governor appointed Frank E. Farnham of this town as Trial Justice. Thus we are supplied with two trial justices, as Mr. Merrill's term of office will not expire for two years yet. The nomination was confirmed without opposition from the council.

At a meeting of Holten Lodge 104, I. O. O. F., last Tuesday evening, the following officers were elected: N. G., Geo. E. Parker; V. G., George H. Manning; Rec. Sec'y., Eben I. Kimball; Treasurer, Geo. F. Sanger. The elected and appointed officers will probably be installed two weeks from last Tuesday night.

During the hot summer months nothing is so pleasant to the house-keeper as to be able to discard the use of the cook stove and range, and use one of Adams & Westlake's fine oil stoves. They do not heat up your house and are great economizers. Call at D. A. & F. H. Caskin's and have them show you how they operate.

At a meeting of the National Greenback Club Wednesday evening, at Ashland hall, the following officers were unanimously elected: President, Richard Kimball; Vice Presidents, Ira Foster, James F. Sullivan; Secretary, Edwin C. Boxwell; Financial Secretary, H. J. G. Kimball; Treasurer, Wm. F. Sumner; Executive Committee, Edward Trask, George F. Barnes, John J. O'Leary, Joseph H. Swett, Lewis Peabody.

Writing Papers. A large assortment of writing papers by the pound. Parties wishing such will do well to give us a call. Smith & Robinson, 42 Market street, Lynn. Successors to S. A. Barton.

And now while our wide awake Postmaster is making every effort to accommodate the public, wouldn't it be a good plan to place a waste basket in the lobby of the post-office, and then those who tear open their letters in that place can throw the discarded envelopes into the basket, instead of on the floor and in the street.

Wm. Dady of Salem, while at work shoveling tan for Mr. D. W. Burt, at the tannery of Mr. Isaac Hardy's on Wallis street, dropped dead Tuesday from heart disease, attacks of which he was subject to. Dr. Pike was called, and the remains were viewed by the medical examiner. He was about fifty years of age and leaves a family.

Mrs. Phœbe Robinson, wife of Archelaus Robinson, whose death was announced in these columns only two weeks ago, followed her husband last Monday after lingering in grief for some sixteen days. The aged couple had borne life's burden for more than fifty years together, and we trust that they have been re-united in a happier world. Her age was eighty-two years.

There have been several presents to the teachers in the Wallis School. Mr. Barnes was presented by the members of the first class with a Rogers Group; Miss Hill was made the recipient of Shakespeare's works in 13 volumes by the members of the second class; Miss Stratton received an elegant painting from the third class, and the members of Miss Chadwick's class surprised her with a beautiful fan.

Frank I. Proctor, of this town, obtained the Valedictory rank in Phillips Academy, Andover, from which he has just graduated. He also obtained a Latin and Greek Prize. He will enter Harvard College in the fall, and will room with the son of Rev. Mr. Carpenter, formerly of So. Peabody, who is already a student there.

A novelty in pyrotechnics is a fire work for display by day. It is a shell which, when shot from a mortar, explodes high in the air, and discharges paper figures, hollow and provided with weights. The weights pull down the figures until they are inflated with air that rushes through an opening. They come from Japan, and are made in fifty different varieties.

A horse, the property of Dr. George M. Frost, was left standing in the yard at his residence last Tuesday, and by some means the horse became frightened and dashed out of the yard. In passing into the street the buggy collided with a tree, overturning it and damaging it considerably. The horse cleared himself from the carriage, but was stopped without doing any further damage.

Miss Nellie R. Little, the second assistant of the Peabody High School, was unable to remain at the examination of that school, as she herself graduates to-day from Bates College at the head of her class. Miss Little has made many friends while in town, whose congratulations will follow her as she delivers the valedictory address to her classmates. She will spend her vacation in Lewiston, Maine.

At a meeting of the School Committee last evening, all the present corps of teachers in our schools were re-elected. There has been but one resignation, that of Miss Esty. Mr. Bill was re-elected teacher of music in the schools until March 1st of next year. The committee claim that his work with the younger pupils of the schools has been very satisfactory.

The scholars of the first class of the Centre School surprised their teacher, Mr. Jefferson K. Cole, at his residence on School street Monday evening, and presented him with an elegant black ebony Dictionary stand. The presentation speech in behalf of the scholars was made by Miss Edith M. Torr. Mr. Cole responded with a few appropriate remarks. After spending a pleasant evening, the scholars retired to their homes.

There will be a case in the police court next Monday, that will be of considerable interest, as it contains several legal points. The case is that of Joseph F. Flint of West Peabody, against one Kelley, a well known book peddler, for cutting off the limbs of an apple tree, belonging to Mr. Flint, which he (Kelley) claims hung over his land. The claim of Mr. Flint is that the land is not Kelley's, that it is land over which he (Flint) has a right of way, and that the trees are also split down and cut on his land. Benjamin for plaintiff, and Crowley for defendant.

Letters remaining in the office June 27, 1883: Gilman Collamore, Michael Carty, Lawrence Cuddire, Allan H. Cameron, Jas. Fogerty, Jos. Fagan, Edward Farrell, Susie George, David Gilbert, (2), Edward Kewvan, Mrs. Michael Kelley, Mrs. Jas. H. Lewis, Mrs. Elizabeth Mason, Benj. McDonald, Elbridge Mansfield, Mrs. E. Nagle, Michael O'Brien, Mr. Partick, Mrs. Kate Sweeney, Mrs. Warren Twiss, William Walker, Jos. Wirth, Edward Ware, G. M. Wilson.

As Mrs. John Gott, of Gloucester, wife of cashier Gott of the First National Bank of that place, was returning from a picnic at Augusta, Me., last Friday, the horse became frightened and ran, upsetting the carriage which contained four people, injuring all of them severely. Mrs. Gott is severely, if not permanently injured. The lady was on a visit to her sister, Mrs. North of Augusta. Mrs. Gott is a daughter of Mrs. Jonathan King of this town, and widely known, and formerly resided here.

As Dr. Sam'l Worcester's horse was standing in front of his office on the corner of Washington and Federal streets, Salem, last Monday morning, one Jas. Claxton, well known in this town, stole the team and started for Peabody. Word was sent to the Salem Police, who immediately started in pursuit; arriving in Peabody officers Peasley and Barnabee joined them and started towards Danvers. Claxton was captured near the carriage factory of Pike & Whipple, and brought back to Salem.

An exhibition of the four upper classes of the Wallis school was given in the hall of their school building, this morning at 9 o'clock. It consisted of readings, recitations and music; and called out an assemblage of the parents and friends of the school which completely filled the hall. The programme was very satisfactory—the readings and recitations showing the efficient care and training which they had received. Piano solos by the younger misses and lads, violin and banjo and tambourine playing was interspersed with the literary exercises, and the musical gifts of some of the scholars is certainly worthy of great praise. There was a violin solo by Master Quint, and a banjo solo by Master Osborn, son of John Osborn, accompanied on the piano by little Miss Grosvenor, of the sixth class in the school. The damp weather had broken one of the strings of the banjo, and when the piece was announced, Master Osborn had to retire and repair it. He speedily returned, and, seating himself by the side of the piano proceeded to tune it with all the composure of a professional player. It was received with great applause. Master Farrington recited a humorous piece with good effect provoking roars of laughter. The closing piece was a piano solo by Master Eagan, which was played entirely without notes and in a masterly manner for a lad so young. The entire programme was under the direction of Mr. Barnes.

(From the Fireside Favorite.)

Among the Flowers.

BY LYDIA DAVIS THOMSON.

Ever may we rich blessings meet,
And gather with the passing hours,
The while we breathe the perfume sweet
That silent flows from dear bright flowers,
If but our souls will outward reach
To grasp the lessons which they teach.

The dear, sweet flowers, that God hath given
This changing life of ours to cheer,
Methinks a language, learned from heaven,
They daily speak that we may hear—
And in their humbleness we trace
Purity, peacefulness and grace;

They tell of Faith and Hope and Love—
Of faith when still they keep their bloom
While dark is all the sky above;
Of hope when through the mist and gloom
They still unfold their petals fair;
Of love when sunshine fills the air.

And while they teach us how to live,
Through good or ill, or joy or strife,
They, likewise, this deep lesson give—
They're but a type of human life,
And as they bloom and fade away
So we must greet life's closing day.

Man's life is like the "early flower,"
We know the Holy Scripture saith—
That passeth with the passing hour,
And dieth with the wind's chill breath.
And is this all? It telleth more—
Of life beyond this transient shore.

Aye, far away beyond Death's portal,
From toil and pain and cankering care,
Awaits another life, immortal,
For Death can never enter there;
And when our earthly mission's done
Our life has only just begun.

And by-and-by in that bright Heaven,
To Him who guards us all our days,
With purer thought than here is given
We'll sing again our love and praise;
While bloom the never fading flowers
Through all the long, eternal hours.

The Wild Bird's Song.

BY E. A. M.

What is it that the wild bird says?
Come listen to his song:—
Sweet, love is of the summer time,
And summer is not long.

The blossom fades upon the bough
Before the month of June,
And when at last the red rose comes
She tarries but a moon.

Come while the earth is glad and green,
We'll build our nest together;
For love is of the summer time,
And cannot bide foul weather."

O sweetheart! listen, listen well,
Unto the wild bird's song:—
"Sweet, love is of the summer time
And summer is not long."

The May is white upon the hedge,
Why should we longer tarry?
When hedge-rows bloom and wild birds nest,
Then is the time to marry.

July Century.

Printers' Ink is King.

There is a host of men who boast
Of powder, cotton, steam;
But every hour the mighty power
Of printers' ink is seen;
It moves the world as easily
As does some mighty thing,
And men proclaim in despot's ears
That printers' ink is king.

The man of gold, of wealth untold,
Printers' ink may scorn,
Or knit his brow, nor deign to bow
To one so lowly born;
But printers' ink has built its throne
Where mind its tributes bring,
And printers all the world around
Shout, "Printers' ink is king!"

King of the world of thought refined,
No abject slave it claims:
Where Superstition's victims pined,
It burst their servile chains.
In every clime, in coming years,
Will men proud anthems sing,
And round the world the echoes float
That printers' ink is king.

Delicia.

She was so exquisitely beautiful, it was actually provoking that there shouldn't be the least romance about her. Waves of pale-golden hair rippled away from her pearly forehead, and were gathered into a superb knot at the back of her head. Such a blue gleamed in her sweet eyes, such a lovely pink mantled her soft cheek, such a smile parted her ripe mouth, that, well-bred as you might be, you could not have refrained from staring at her, and then, thinking of strawberries and cream, have longed for a silver spoon with which to eat her.

But for all this there wasn't the least romance connected with her. Though three-and-twenty, Delicia had never had a lover. She lived in a quiet farmhouse among the White Mountains with her father and mother all the year round. She loved them dearly—was happy with them and her horse, Joan of Arc.

Joan was beautiful, high-spirited; and Delicia, who cared nothing for dancing or flirting, and could neither sing nor play, was passionately fond of horseback-riding. There was a spirit of pride and daring in her which made her a superb rider, and caused the young men of the very bare neighborhood to call her haughty.

The delights of her life were the pine-scented woods, the winter landscapes of ermine snow and glittering ice, the dreamy sweetness of the Autumn orchards.

At twenty-three, Delicia had been content with an existance lived in comparative solitude.

Then came a terrible calamity. Her father was killed by a runaway horse, and her mother, frail and unable to endure the shock, sank slowly but surely, until, one mockingly bright, beautiful day, Delicia found herself entirely alone.

Outsiders then called her cold, for no one saw her weep. She only trembled so excessively beside the open graves that old Aunt Thankful, who had nursed her dead mother, was obliged to support her to keep her from falling. Otherwise she was composed, only her sweet eyes had a look in them pitiful to see.

A change had come over Delicia's serene life; the dear home-love was gone, and the girl's content had gone With a native courage and reserve peculiar to her, she made no complaint. She asked Aunt Thankful, rather wistfully to stay and keep house for her, and then turned to her books and horse and maiden meditations.

But Delicia's dreams were troubled now. Life's grief had touched her; she knew that sorrow was in the world; she feared the future.

The strange, sad summer passed. One fine November day, Bob, the hired man, led Joan of Arc prancing to the door, the side-saddle on her back.

"I have to go to the village, miss, to buy the new milch-cow. I'll not be back till noon. You'll not mind letting Joan stand with the saddle on a little till I come?"

"No," said Delicia, absently.

Her beautiful oval cheek was white under her velvet cap. There was a sadness quite unmistakable in her beautiful eyes as she turned Joan's head toward the hill-road.

Yet who, to have seen her beautiful, spirited figure loping along the uplands, would have divined the rare heart of the heiress of Wheatlands?

She did not, perhaps, understand herself, and did not know she had asked her own soul, "Am I to be all my life alone? Will no one great and good ever ask me to be his dearly beloved wife? If not, I shall perish off the face of the earth."

The girl was purity itself, and as unconscious of the ignoble aims of life as the lily in her chamber window. To marry for any reason but for love, pure and worshipful, had never entered her mind as a possibility.

"I never had sister or brother; my father and mother are dead; I must have some love or I shall seek death!"

You must have guessed rarely to have guessed how deeply ran the still waters of that idyllic life. You would not have guessed it from anything in her perfect, proud face as she turned it toward a passing carriage. The occupants were a blase-looking man of thirty, perhaps, and a very young and pretty girl.

A single glance told the story—that the young girl was loving and unhappy; that the man, for some reason, found her desirable of prossession.

He had hard black eyes that repelled Delicia; yet the sight of the two seated so closely gave her a vague, painful feeling of solitude and desolation which not long ago was utterly unknown to her.

The carriage glittered by, and Joan loped softly along the woody road, soundless with a thick carpet of pine needles.

She made a circuit and came back to the main road.

Suddenly unusual sounds attracted her attention. A crash and violent screams reaches her ear, and as she rode forward, a strange sight burst upon her view.

The carriage had gone over an embankment, and was a perfect wreck. The horses lay prostrate—one of them killed, the other struggling desperately, but unable to rise; and prone beneath the broken vehicle was stretched the senseless body of the dark, handsome man.

Over him bent the girl, screaming no longer, but sobbing violently.

Delicia slipped from her horse, and was at her side some moments before she realized her presence.

"Wallace! Wallace! for heaven's sake, speak to me! You cannot—you cannot be dead! Oh, dear Wallace—see! it is little Alta! Only speak to me!"

Then, with a despairing cry, the young girl fell upon the pulseless breast.

Then, starting to her feet to look about for help, apparently, she saw Delicia.

"Oh, she grsped, snatching at her arm, 'look at him! see is he dead? The carrirge fell upon him, while I—I am not hurt at all. Oh, heaven, what shall I do?"

The white, still face told Delicia that the man at her feet would never breathe again.

Hearing wheels, she sprang back into the road, and encountered old David Green and his son, the keepers of the village hotel.

Summoned to view the scene, they disentangled the senseless body, placed it in the carriage, and turned to Delicia for further directions.

"Get a doctor immediately that you reach the villiage, Mr. Green. I will take this young lady home with me, and bring her back to the hotel as soon as I can put Joan to the phaeton. Come with me, my poor child! I will take care of you," to the petite, white-faced girl; and throwing her riding-skirt more closely over her arm, she led Joan by a short-cut back to Wheatlands.

By the way she tried so question her companion; but the girl, almost transported with grief, made such incoherent replies that she could only learn that she had been riding since the middle of the previous night; that they were on their way to Conway; that they intended to be married there.

"Were you—were you," said Delicia, gently, in involuntary amaze, "running away from your friends?"

Alta nodded.

"From my brother, Guy Vannevar. He did not like Mr. Munroe. Yes, we were to be married against his will, and now—oh, Wallace, Wallace!"

Throwing Joan's bridle over the gate-post, Delicia led the trembling girl to the door. Is was locked.

The key hung in the secret place known only to the family, for Aunt Thankful had at last executed a promise to visit a sick neighbor some quarter of a mile distant. Bob had not yet returned, for it wanted still an hour till noon.

To Delicia's consternation, the unhappy girl no sooner entered the warm parlor than she fainted.

At length Alta Vannever again drew her breath.

Passing through the hall to procure a restorative, Delicia saw a man just in the act of vaulting upon Joan. It was not Bob, though the saddle had been removed and lay upon the ground; it was a man in a ragged coat, evidently a tramp.

With a flash in her blue eyes, Delicia stepped back, and snatched a silver-mounted revolver from a shelf, threw wide the hall door and fired.

The bridle fell from the man's right hand, and Joan—three steps beyond the gate—stopped.

To Delicia's surprise, the man instantly dismounted, and turning quickly toward her, lifted his hat.

"I am effectually stopped, young lady; but, believe me, I did not intend to steal your horse, and certainly left an equivalent, though now in a sorry condition."

Bewildered still more by the courteous words and cultured tone, Delicia turned in the direction the stranger pointed with his left hand, and saw within the yard a dusty buggy and panting horse.

"I am trying to overtake my young sister, who has eloped with a scoundrel," said the man, who was both young and handsome, "and my horse broke down hopelessly just before I reached your door. Otherwise, in less than an hour I should have probably overtaken my sister before she was married and her life ruined. So near the object of my long and desperate drive, I could not be balked of its object for want of a horse. I knocked three times at your door, intending to beg or hire yours, which I saw, fresh, standing at the gate, but for some reason I could summon no living being. Knowing that my horse was more than equal yours in value, though now almost killed by hard driving, I resolved to take him, and, after overtaking the man who is running away from me, to instantly restore your property to you; but"—with a little bitter laugh—"you have effectually prevented that. I think I am bleeding to death."

His voice closed faintly; the blood was spurting from his wrist. He sank upon the step at her feet.

Delicia's cheeks grew white, for she knew the danger of that terrible bleeding. Unless it were stopped, the man would in a few moments be dead.

Springing to the side of the now unresponsive stranger, who seemed unable to utter another word, she snatched her handkerchief from her pocket, and tying it about the wounded arm, inserted a stick picked from the ground, thus making an effectual ligature, and, to the abatement of her terror, saw the frightful jets of blood subside.

The stranger's white face, the deluge of red blood, the sudden relief from spurring terror, turned Delicia suddenly faint. Then she struggled hard against a terrible reeling sensation, and held her own.

She thought wishfully of the glass of cordial upon the hall-table, but her feet refused to stir.

Suddenly steps sounded at the gate. To her inexpressible joy and thankfulness, Aunt Thankful and Bob appeared.

Delicia explained to the former, briefly though her voice sounded far away to herself.

"Wounded — hurt — bleeding awfully! Bob, ride for a doctor fast as you can go!" cried the old nurse, instantly in her element.

The wounded man was making visible efforts to keep from swooning, but when Aunt Thankful had administered a glass of brandy, and bathed his temples in cold water, he rose and walked weakly into the house, where, at her solicitations, he stretched himself upon a sofa, and then unexpectedly fainted.

"I don't in the least understand who this man is," remarked Aunt Thankful, steadily applying restoratives; "but such a ragged coat and fine shirt I never saw together before. Wanted to hire a horse, did he? What did you shoot him for? Of all strange actions——"

The driving of the doctor's buggy into the yard stopped her remarks, when Delicia returned to Alta Vannevar, to find her in a wandering delirium.

Three strange days were devoted to nursing the invalids. A burning fever made the young girl unconscious.

Aunt Thankful's charge was conscious, but very weak and silent. Indeed, he seemed to himself to be in a dream half full of delights, but pervaded by a great trouble which he could scarcely name.

The radiantly lovely face of Delicia, the rustle of her dress, the sound of her footsteps pervaded his consciousness like a blessing, while his desperate quest and misfortune were only half realized by him in the bodily weakness and inaction of brain caused by excessive loss of blood.

"How long have I been here?"

Delicia sat by him, having taken Aunt Thankful's place for a few moments, and started from a momentary absence of thought to find Guy Vannevar's eyes fixed piercingly upon her.

"This is the fourth day. Are you better?"

"I am not sick, only in a sort of dream which I cannot wake myself from."

"You are very weak."

"It was you I saw when I came here, wasn't it?"

"It was I who shot you," replied Delicia, blushing.

"I—I remember. Oh, my sister Alta!"—trying to rise upon his elbow.

"Lie down, please. You must not exert yourself. I have something to tell you," said Delicia.

"I have been here four days, you say. Good God! what will become of her?"

"Drink this coffee and try to be quiet. Alta is safe."

"How can you know?"

"I have her in my care. Wallace Munroe is dead—accidentally killed.'

"And they were not married?"

"No."

"Thank God!"

He could talk no longer, but was visibly better in a few hours.

The next day, pale, wasted, but strong, in a simple earnestness, he said, quietly, to Delicia:

"How wonderfully beautiful you are!"

Something in his eyes kindled hers, and for the first time in her life Delicia felt within her pure breast the warmth and sweetness of love.

Half alarmed by her emotions and the growing power of the beautiful eyes bent upon her, she rose from her place beside him.

"You can see Alta to-day, you know, if she is better. I will go and see."

Alta Vannevar was better in body, but suffering in mind.

She looked like a living wraith in one of Delicia's long white wrappers, and turned from her brother's kiss and sat down in Delicia's lap like a tired child.

"Oh, if I could die! I know you love me, Guy; but you did not love Wallace. And he is dead. Oh, Delicia, you understand—you are a woman. I loved him!"

Guy Vannevar looked down at the two figures buried in the great easy-chair, the serene woman folding the suffering child to her bosom, and a look inexpressible filled his soft, dark eyes. And Delicia, glancing up, saw it and knew it was for her.

I cannot tell you how, in a few days, these two grew together; but when Guy Vannevar had told her of his position as a gentleman, and the son of a gentleman, and discarded his disguise, which had facilitated his pursuit of Wallace Munroe, the atmosphere of mystery and suspicion was entirely dispelled, and as weeks and months brought their developments and occurrences, Delicia realized that the prayer of her secret heart was granted—one, great and good, loved her, and had asked her to be his dearly beloved wife.

ELECTRICAL PHENOMENON.

A most remarkable electrical phenomenon manifested itself on the line of the Union Pacific Railway last Sunday, between North Platte and Sidney. The influence, however, was felt perceptibly beyond those points. The rails were surcharged with a current of electricity, moving from west to east to so high a degree that hand cars standing on the track were impelled at a fair rate of speed by it. One hand-car at Brule got away from the section men next east. The influence of the current was felt by many persons along the track, and no little excitement prevailed during its continuance.—Omaha Herald.

He who imitates what is evil always goes beyond the example that is set: on the contrary, he who imitates what is good always falls short.

"ROT" IN THE DAILIES.—It is a part of the business of the daily newspapers, forcibly remarks Henry Ward Beecher, to set before the community the mistakes, vices and crimes of men Who are the heroes? The man who has been convicted of a murder is one. A man may have been a saint, he may have spent his life in doing good, without attracting notice, but if he cuts somebody's throat he stands head and shoulders higher than all the saints What he says is chronicled, men visit him, ladies bring flowers to him, and on the morning of the execution notes are made of what he had for breakfast, how he looked, how he walked to the scaffold, what was the particular way in which the rope was put around his neck. This loathesome necessity of justice fills column after column, and men are found who read it. They do enjoy iniquity. The men who read these details, Mr. Beecher thinks, are more culpable than the men who collect them.

"What are your views in regard to the tariff?" asked an enterprising reporter of a gentleman who was standing at the bar drinking with a friend. "I'm in favor of the protection of American industries," frankly answered the person addressed. "Then, of course, you are a Republican," added the newspaper man. "Not if I know myself. I'm a Democrat." "And have you any opinion on the subject?" continued the scribe, turning to the gentleman's friend. "You may put me down as a free trader," replied the latter. "Oh, I see; you're a Democrat." "Nary time. I'm a Republican. What are you?" "Well," responded the astonished reporter, "I was a Democrat when I came in here, but I'm blowed if I know what I am now."—Brooklyn Eagle.

The new and most convenient method of using the insect powder for killing flies and mosquitoes in a room, is to put about a teaspoonful of the powder upon a piece of paper, glass or wood, and build up a little cone or hill of it; set the top on fire with a match and it will burn like a slow-match. The fine blue smoke, which is not at all disagreeable and perfectly harmless, will gradually fill the air and kill the vermin. The room must, of course, be closed for the time of fumigating.

THE KEELEY MOTOR.

Resting upon a broad iron bed in the centre of the room was an object somewhat like a gigantic iron egg cut through near the point and exposing the interior. The detached part lay up against a wall. There said the workman, "is the engine." Inside the iron shell there were ten heavy iron tubes, arranged in the form of a circle, and fastened at one end into an iron disk and at the other into a so-called pin plate—a heavy iron ring, containing three hundred steel pins, ranging from one and a half to four inches in length. Five of the tubes were painted black, and were said to be vacuum or negative tubes, and the remainder, which were white, were called pressure or positive tubes. A heavy iron drum fits into this nest of tubes. The various parts are jointed together with steel cylinders, and are supported upon ponderous standards by the same means.

The engine, with its appurtenances, will weigh, when completed, nearly thirteen tons. It will exert, Keeley says, a force of 500 horse power. It will be furnished with a belt forty four inches in width, and it is stated that when at work the whole engine will revolve. It has not turned yet, and, in fact, has not yet been all put together. Mr. Keeley says, however, that he has successfully operated a small engine on which this one is modelled.

The reporter was given a glimpse of the little engine through a peep-hole in the door of Mr. Keeley's private workroom. It was not in operation, but the attendant said it had been sent spinning round by a whiff from a soda water tank filled with vapor.

The mysterious generator, which had been the subject of a good deal of comment, has been erected in a second story back room of Mr. Keeley's building. As soon as the big engine is completed, connection with the generator will be established by copper tubing. It is declared by members of the motor company that everything will be completed in a few months. Mr. Keeley, it is asserted, is drawing up the papers required in making application for letters patent. He has already filled nearly 800 foolscap pages, and is trying to describe his machine in language that can be understood.

CUNNING MAINE FOXES.

One morning recently, as I was crossing lots with my hounds, I saw an old red fox run into a thicket. I put the dog on his track and concealed myself in the thicket, knowing that a fox will often circle and pick up his old track. I could hear the hound baying off toward New Gloucester. Then it changed and grew more and more distinct, and I knew the fox was returning. I must have waited some half an hour when I saw the fox dart into a hollow log a little distance to my left, but as he went out at the other end I remained in my hiding place, supposing it a trick of the fox to put the dog off his track. The dog was puzzled only an instant and followed the fox on a longer circuit this time, but in the course of an hour I saw it again enter one end of the log and come out at the other. Thinks I, "My chap, I'll play you a Yankee trick by stopping up the further end of that log." This I did, and again hid myself, hoping for a third return. I was hidden about the same length of time, when, by the voice of my dog, I knew the fox was returning. A few minutes later I saw the fox enter the log. I ran up to the open end and soon had it secured. This being done, I awaited the coming up of the dog, which I tied to a sapling, while I went out to get an axe. I soon got back and opened the hole sufficiently to see four foxes instead of one. "How was that?" It's plain enough. One fox would run until tired, then would enter the log and another would take his place.

SMART PEOPLE IN NEW YORK.

A New York hotel man, on being asked how he managed to wake a man up and get him out doors, when he got drunk and fell asleep on the sofa in the office, he said; "Why, you see, when he gets asleep, as he generally does after having drank too much, nobody can take him up or do anything with him, and he is a combination of a devil and a wreck. I just get a little ice, well pounded up, and take him in a friendly way round the neck and slip the ice down his back. As it descends, he sort of straightens his spine up; that makes it drop down a little further. As it gets toward the small of the back, he looks very much surprised, he opens his eyes wide, which previously he could not open himself, or any one for him. He looks at three or four places around, and seeing everybody looking at him, and feeling a little cold and queer, he rises right up and walks out of the front door. I never knew it to fail, and don't you forget it." It might be a good idea for roundsmen to take a piece of ice with them to wake up policemen.—Pecks Sun.

AN OLD HERMIT.

Dr. Moore is a curious old hermit in Arizona. He is the only dweller in Rucker Valley. At the back of his cabin some sacks were hung as though carelessly, but when drawn aside the opening of a tunnel was disclosed. This secret passage was 120 feet long, arched with stones, enlarged to a considerable chamber in the centre, and represented years of hard work by the owner. He had arranged a keg of gunpowder, with a fuse ready to be lighted, so that, in case his enemies discovered him in this retreat, he could blow them and himself to pieces. The foes were imaginary, of course, but he firmly believed in their existence, though sane on all other matters.

The very exercise of industry immediately in itself is delightful, and hath an innate satisfaction.

THE UNCANNY HAT RACK.

A shadowy conductor leaned negligently against the rail of a sixth avenue car the other afternoon and stared straight before him with an expression that indicated perturbation and doubt. He collected the fares with a far-off look in his eyes, rang the bell mechanically, and even forgot to squeeze the arms of his plump young passengers as they stepped on or off the car. After fourteenth street had been passed there was little to do, and the conductor fell into a brown study that was only disturbed by the sudden switching of the car into Carmine street. Then the conductor roused himself and said:

"Well, I'll be slugged if I can understand it."

"What's the matter?"

"Do you believe in spirits?" he asked cautiously.

"What kind of spirits?"

"Supernatural spirits," said the conductor, gravely, "'cause if you don't I can take you home with me any night and convert you to the belief by means of the hat rack in our boardin' house. That rack, sir, would convert a horse block."

"What's the matter with the rack?"

"It's got spirits. It broke me all up. Now, any man will admit that a hat rack is for the purpose of holding hats, won't he? Well, that rack will and won't hold hats, just as it darn pleases. Frinstance, you can walk into the house during the daytime and just toss your hat in a westerly direction, and it hangs itself up on that rack without no trouble whatsoever. It can't escape the rack to save its soul. So powerful a grip does the rack get on a hat by daylight that a hat almost hangs itself up. But the phernominal act occurs when you go in at night. The best juggler in New York can't hang his hat up then. I ain't a pure and simple muff, y' know, because I was born and brought up right here in this town, and can tell the difference between the Custom House and St. Paul's Church every day in the week and twice on Sunday. But I can't hang up a hat on that rack after sundown. No more can any of the other boarders; leastwise some of them may get their hats onto the rack, but they never stay there. I have known instances of hats hanging on like grim death for an hour or an hour an' a half, but they was bound to be sent spelin' across the hall at the end of that time."

"How long has this been going on?"

"Three weeks next Tuesday. I first discovered it one night when I went home after a late trip. I took off my hat, put it gently on a peg, an' started up stairs, when—biff! —every hat flew off that rack as if it had been shot from a cannon. I went gropin' around in the dark, pickin' up the hats, but they was slung off faster 'n I could hang them up. I nearly broke my back tryin' to pick them up for an hour, an' then went to bed an' dreamed that the Irish was bombardin' New York, an' that I was Fort Hamilton. I can't get the pesky thing out of my mind, and I'm gettin' so much afraid of the rack that before long I'll have to sleep in the stables in my hat, or else go home bareheaded."

The conductor clasped his hands before him and sunk into another reverie that was not disturbed until the car pulled up at Broadway.—N. Y. Sun.

WHAT IT COST.

Fifteen millions of barrels of beer were consumed in this country last year, at the cost to the consumers of $480,000,000. There were seventeen million gallons of liquor consumed, which cost $313,000,000. Adding wines, the money spent in liquor every year makes of a total of $800,000,000. As all our taxes—national, State, city, county and town—are stated, on the authority of the Census Bureau, to be about $700,000,000, it follows that we spend more in liquor, by $100,000,000 yearly, than we do for the whole machinery of our national, State and local governments. But even this does not tell the whole story, for there are statistics which show that 84 per cent. of all the crime in the country is due to the use of liquor. One in every twenty of the able-bodied men of this country is made a pauper, a loafer, or a criminal, by drink. If all these men were capable of constant work, they would make not less than $200,000,000 per annum. This makes the liquor tax fully $1,000,000,000 per annum, more than half our national debt, and $200,000,000 more than the total of all our exports. Is it any wonder that some people become fanatical, in contemplating the enormity of the liquor traffic?

CHINESE FIENDISHNESS.

A horrible tragedy is being whispered about in the western suburbs of Canton, China. A hungry slave girl had stolen some food, whereupon her mistress beat her black and blue. Not content with this castigation, the savage brute cut a slice out of the poor girl's thigh and made her cook it and eat it. Next day the slave girl died. The mistress became alarmed, tried to conceal the corpse, but was discovered. Finding she got into trouble, she called the Kai Fong, the Ti Po and the Lokang together, and paid them 20 taels each. As the deceased was only a slave girl, the arrangement seemed satisfactory to all parties concerned, and the matter is now practically hushed up.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The editor of a leading magazine, rising to explain to a legion of contributors recently, said: "Not all poorly-written articles are rejected, nor all good ones accepted." That's a queer way to keep faith with regular subscribers who buy the periodical with the expectation of always getting the best literature that is offered.

Search others for their virtues and thyself for thy vices.

The Chicago Tribune contains the following libel upon the foot of a gentleman of that city: "Young Smith called on Miss Higgenbottom a few nights ago, and got very wet on his way to the young lady's residence. After he arrived nothing would do but she must make a fire for him, and, in spite of his protestations, she soon had a roaring fire started. Drawing near it, Mr. Smith poised one foot on the other in front of the blaze. For some moments not a word was spoken. Presently the young lady gently remarked: "Mr. Smith, please take down the blower; I think the fire has a good start." Down came the feet, and Smith doesn't go there any more.

The Rev. W. H. Powell, pastor of the Lee Avenue Congregational Church, Williamsburg, said in a late sermon on Sunday observances: "Until rich Christians make some provision whereby poor Christians can seek some method of relaxation from toil other than that which they now find in trips to Coney Island and other health-giving resorts, I say let the poor Christians enjoy their way of observing the Sabbath. Because the wealthy man is able to enjoy this day of rest within the bounds of orthodox custom, he should not compel his poorer neighbor to observe the day within the same bounds, when he knows that to the latter they do not include the same comfort and rest."

The first fare over the big Brooklyn bridge was paid by a New York reporter. If the cent was not borrowed for this occasion, it goes to show that the rumors about the New York journalists being underpaid are grossly exaggerated. Perhaps the cent was a counterfeit, or the reporter may have picked it up, or possibly the whole story is a newspaper sensation, got up for effect. At all events, it was highly unprofessional for the reporter to have paid his way. Journalism seems to be in its infancy in New York if reporters actually pay cash for anything they get. We manage things better here in Texas.—Texas Siftings.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

Indications seem to warrant the belief that travel to the White mountains and other important points in connection therewith via Boston, Concord, Montreal & White Mountain railroads, will be greatly in excess of previous years, and to meet this, also, the demand for quicker time in transit, the Boston, Concord & Montreal railroad has arranged its time table so that instead of starting at 9 a. m., as formerly, a special White mountain train will leave the Boston & Lowell station in Boston at 8.30 a. m., arriving at Fabyan's twenty-five minutes earlier than last year.

GIVEN AWAY.

We cannot help noticing the liberal offer made to all invalids and sufferers by Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. You are requested to call at Spaulding's Drug Store, and get a Trial Bottle free of cost, if you are suffering with Consumption, Severe Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Hay Fever, Loss of Voice, Hoarseness, or any affection of the Throat or Lungs. It will positively cure you.

No more truthful sentence was ever penned by man than the following written by Chancellor Kent: "The parent who sends his son into the world uneducated, defrauds the community of a lawful citizen, and bequeaths to it a nuisance." These words should be written in letters of gold over the entrance to every school house in the land.

If you feel "all run down" and overcome with the heat, try a bottle of Morse's Yellow Dock. It is the best summer tonic and blood purifier ever offered to the public.

If any candid person can read Gov. Butler's insulting cross-examination of Lizzie McKennon, a Tewksbury almshouse attendant, and not feel that Butler is a "disgrace" to himself and the state of Massachusetts, we fail to see the need of any such word in the English language.—Clinton Courant.

Next fall there will be an election for sheriff of Essex county, and talk in democratic circles is that Mayor Hill of Salem will be the standard bearer of that party in the shrievalty campaign. Sheriff Herrick has commonly exhibited pretty good speed and staying qualities on the political race course, and a spurt with Mayor Hill would make an attractive exhibition. Which would you bet on?—Lawrence Eagle.

FIFTH WEEK

— OF —

OSBORNE'S GREAT SALE

— OF THE —

CUSHMAN STOCK.

THE EXCITEMENT ON THE INCREASE!

STILL GREATER BARGAINS THIS WEEK!

ENORMOUS SALES AND UNPARALLELED SUCCESS!

In spite of the fact that business generally throughout the country, is dull, and the Retail Boot and Shoe trade in particular, there has been no abatement of the excitement caused by our sale of the Cushman stock. This is a positive proof that our advertisements are bona fide in every particular, and if customers occasionally do get disappointed by not finding an article that is wanted, they must recollect that when goods are off red at such low figures, an early inspection is advisable and necessary. In such a rushing business as we are having on this stock, it is impossible to tell exactly when a lot of goods will be sold out. The programme we have prepared this week, is by far the most attractive we have yet offered.

READ! REFLECT! PONDER!

Don't Cry Humbug! Don't be Sceptical! Examine samples, permit your Eyes' Judgment to Verify our Announcement.

One thing is certain, we intend to dispose of every dollars worth of the Cushman stock immediately, and with that end in view, shall

CUT, SLASH AND SLAUGHTER PRICES.

Nothing but the purchase of this Large Stock of Goods at about Fifty Cents on the Dollar, would warrant the prices we make. Don't get it into your head that they are old goods, for they are not. They are equally as good as any Boots and Shoes to be found.

Nobody need wear old Boots and Shoes after seeing the Great Bargains we are offering.

We are selling Ladies' Kid Quarter Lined Croquet Slippers for 45 cents, guaranteed worth 75 cents.

A lot of Ladies' Kid Button, for $1.10, worth $1.50.

A large lot of Stacy, Adams & Co. world renowned Men's Congress Button and Bals, sizes 5, 5 1-2, 6, 9 and 10 selling for $3.00, which is about half the price this line of goods is sold for throughout the country. No man wearing these sizes can afford to pass them by.

A lot of Ladies' Fine Serge Button, 16 thread, sizes 2 1-2, 3, 3 1-2, in B, C and D widths, for 90 cents. Worth, and we are selling the large sizes for $1.90.

A lot of Men's Nobby Styles Hand Sewed Strap Shoes, selling for $3.25, $3.50 and $4 75, which we defy you to buy elsewhere of same quality within one dollar per pair of our selling price.

A lot of Men's Hand Sewed Congress Button and Bals, selling for $3.00 and $3.50. Usual selling price on same goods, $5.00.

500 pairs Ladies' House Slippers, only 11 cents, comment is unnecessary.

Ladies' Serge Slippers selling for 23, 45 and 80 cents.

Misses' School Shoes, 85 cts., 95 cts. and $1.10. Sold elsewhere for 25 cents more per pair.

A large lot of Children's School Shoes, only 75, 85 and 95 cents, same quality cannot be bought in this city within 15 cents of these prices.

A large lot of Men's all Solid Strap Shoes, worth $1.00, selling for the absurd price of 65 cts., and precisely the same goods others sell for $1.00.

A splendid shoe in Congress, Bal, and Strap, for $1.25, price elsewhere $1.65.

CARD.

We would respectfully request all who possibly can, to make their purchases as early in the week as possible. This will make it much more agreeable to our customers and will greatly facilitate our business, as Saturday it was almost impossible to manage the immense crowds which thronged our two stores.

ANOTHER of the shrewd campaign dodges of Governor Butler was shown last week in his attempt to make it appear that he was not responsible for the length of time occupied in the Tewksbury investigation. We fail to see how any one but himself is holden, either for the length of time occupied, or for the investigation itself. After the charges made against the institution in the inaugural what could any Legislature do, but appoint a committee? Since the sessions have commenced, His Excellency has taken his own method of bringing his witnesses, has had his own way, mostly, in the examination, has sandwiched it in between musters, college commencements, and even his private law business, and not only the Committee, but the entire Legislature, is kept waiting for nothing except the pleasure of the Governor. And, after all, what has it amounted to? Gen. Butler spoke truly, if he is correctly reported, when he said that there was no necessity of the Legislature re-assembling to hear and act upon the report, as all that could be accomplished, meaning the removal of Marsh, had been accomplished. He might have added that it could all have been done by a few hours' interview with the Board of Lunacy and Charity at the outset, had he been disposed to meet them in a proper manner, and the expense of the entire investigation avoided. We think the Committee would do a sensible thing if they would close the investigation, say in six or seven days, giving both sides proper notice. If Gen. Butler cannot arrange his private matters, and his free trade and Fourth of July orations, so as to be present, let it go on without him. The Legislature wants to go home, and we are sure the people agree with such inclination. Why should they remain in session while the Governor is on business that is of far less consequence than then the prorogation of the Legislature?

THE TAFFY which country editors are in the habit of receiving from managers of different show combinations would seem incredible were it not in black and white. And a conspicuous illustration of this comes from Forepaugh's circus, whose flaming advertisement, no doubt, our readers have expected to see in these columns. We certainly were invited to contribute to the harvest of golden shekels which the management expect to reap in abundance in this vicinity, on the 5th and 6th of July. But in justice to our other advertising patrons, whose favors we appreciate more than those of a traveling managerie, we were obliged to decline their liberal (?) offer. For the past year we, in common, we presume, with other publishers, have been flooded with marked copies of newspapers and illustrated programmes, portions of which, or allusions to which we were kindly invited to copy gratis. We are then, a few weeks before the show, sent by mail from a distant state a large advertisement, with a still larger notice, which we are expected to insert at one quarter of our regular rates in consideration for the following taffy, which must have been swallowed by most of the country papers in this vicinity:

Please do not think we are dictating terms to you. We advertise enormously in all the papers printed in every place where we exhibit, and to all the neighboring towns and villages we send our costly pictorial bills, and thousands of catalogues, programmes, lithographs, etc., etc., and you will readily comprehend that, unlike a person permanently located in a town or city, and doing business, we cannot rely upon the press altogether to make known the nature of our wants. We do not underestimate the power of the press; and far be it from us to disparage the real value of your paper. We hope you will not consider this proposal in the light of an offer from an "Advertising Agency"—we have no desire to make a penny by this transaction, and we only wish the circumstances were such that we could feel warranted in offering you ten times the amount we have named; we make this same proposition to at least a dozen papers, printed away from every town where we exhibit; it is generally accepted, and the total amount thus expended often amounts to more than the papers published where we exhibit receive; and when it is remembered that seven miles is the average distance from which we receive any considerable patronage—and this applies only to long-settled and populous sections of the country—we think you will see that there is no desire on our part to deal niggardly with the press. The coming of a great show, such as ours, is an event of public concern and interest. Our expenses are tremendous; we can't afford to deal otherwise than liberally with the press; and, in conclusion, we hope you will give the great attractions we are to exhibit all publicity in your paper you possibly can afford to do for the sum above named.

Truly yours,
ADAM FOREPAUGH,
Pro'p. Great Forepaugh Show.

EX-GOV. GARCELON, of Maine, in an after dinner speech at Bates College, in which he took, as he said, the key note from the Vaiedictory of Miss Little, remarked that it was a lamentable fact when officers in medical schools high in public favor, cannot write the English language correctly. It certainly called for some change in the method of education. We are not, of course, familiar with the reference of the governor, nor do we know to what particular institution he referred. But we do know that a course of education from the completion of which the student is unable to write fluently and correctly in his native tongue, is defective somewhere. That such examples are not rare, either, is a fact which has come under the observation of many. There are men in high positions, well educated in many things, the objects of envy by their less fortunate brothers, who can not write a dozen sentences grammatically; who would not dare to risk their reputation in giving a production to the public without its being subjected to the careful scrutiny of some trusted critic.

We are led to emphasize this statement more particularly at this time by the figures which we publish in another column as to the rank of those who entered the High School, in the study of grammar. We grant that the examination for the High School is not an absolute test. In many cases it is an unfair test. But the general average in all three of our grammar schools shows the trend of scholarship in this direction. It will be seen that the average rank of the scholars who entered the High School, in grammar, is lower than that of any other branch, and this does not apply to any one but to all three of the schools. What sort of an education in this branch of study have those scholars received whose school days are ended with the grammar school, and who in answering the dozen or more fundamental questions prepared for entrance to the High School, are unable to obtain a ranking of but a trifle over 50 per cent? We take it for granted, of course, that those who desire to enter the High School are as well versed in grammar as those who did not apply, and who perhaps have finished their schooling. We confess that we are greatly surprised at this showing, and the more so because from every school there are the same low rank in this study. There surely is room for a radical improvement—and an improvement where it is needed. For no one can deny that the knowledge how to read, write and speak our own language correctly is indispensable to the young scholar—equally so with the other branches which are taught in our grammar schools.

The Eastern R. R. has issued its neat pamphlet for 1883, giving in condensed form a combination of maps, time tables, excursion and hotel lists, full of reliable information how most conveniently to reach the many places of summer resort all along the line of the road and its connections. This road is offering extra inducements to excursionists during the present season, and seems resolved to carry people if no money is made; hence tourists will get the benefit. By dropping a postal to Lucius Tuttle, general passenger agent, Boston, the manual for this year will be forwarded to applicants.

IRISH LACE COLLARS.—Another rich and rare bargain has been procured by Mr. Peabody for his customers—a lot of real Irish point lace collars, the most desirable collar in the market at about fifty cents on the dollar—half anybody's price—in all the most desirable styles and prices. Remember this is no ordinary chance, and be on hand before the lot is sold, for they will not be duplicated. A few more of that stock of fichus are still to be had. Examine them and you are sure to buy. Peabody's, 227 and 229 Essex street, —Register.

WE BEG our Catholic friends to note that Mr. Donnelly, the only Catholic member of the Board of Lunacy and Charity of the State, has not been renominated by Gov. Butler. Nor has he nominated any other Catholic for the place, although a large number of the people in the institutions under the supervision of that Board are of that faith. It is not only the part of wisdom, but of necessity that there should be a Catholic on this Board, and we commend to all our readers the following sensible remarks, from the Springfield Republican: "The course of the governor toward his Catholic constituents, in regard to appointments on the state board demands at least a passing notice. He found on that board a good Catholic, Mr. Donnelly, appointed by Gov. Talbot,—a man of honor and ability, possessing the confidence of all who know him, whatever their religion, and a true friend of the poor. He has insulted Mr. Donnelly along with the other members, and has dealt some special blows at him through the newspapers. Of course he has not offered to re-appoint him at the expiration of his term, but has twice nominated the notorious Hamilton, a former know-nothing and republican, and has just nominated another Protestant republican, Dr. Sawyer of Duxbury, who is not only now in a controversy upon sanitary issues with the state board, but who is proven to have been a defaulter to the United States government, and whose nomination Gov. Butler has been obliged to withdraw. It is every way desirable that the Catholics should have a representative on the board—yet Butler allows the only Catholic to go out of office and has nominated three or four Protestants and never a Catholic. He would be glad, too, (for personal reasons in each instance) to remove the only woman on the board,—while more than half the poor whom the board cares for, are women and children, and perhaps two-thirds of them are Catholics. It was Gov. Andrew who first broke over the old rule, and appointed Catholics to such offices, and it was Gov. Claflin who first appointed women. Gov. Butler ought to waive his personal spites and follow their example.

Of the late Mrs. Dr. Reynolds, beloved wife of Dr. Reynolds of Red Ribbon fame, an appreciative biographer writes in a Rockford Exchange as follows: Suzanne Samson Reynolds was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., where her early childhood was spent, but as her father was a sea captain, and frequently took his family with him upon his voyages, the little Suzanne was initiated into the life and customs of two continents at her most impressable age, which influence showed itself in her French vivacity of manner and her American practical adaptation to circumstances. She was first sent abroad to a French boarding school at or near Paris, where she remained six years, afterward going to Germany to finish her European education. She was endowed by nature with more than ordinary abilities, and her well-improved, superior advantages for culture made her a woman of rare intellectual attainments, to which was added very attractive personal charms and that superlative adornment of womanhood, an affectionate nature, that made her the devoted wife and mother and Christian leader that she was. To mortal vision this departure seems untimely, but we know not now what we shall know hereafter. Mrs. Reynolds left three children, the youngest of which is less than six months old, and if human ties could ward off death, this home surely would not be desolate to-day. Mrs. Reynolds was married in 1876, and immediately accompanied her husband to Michigan, where he commenced his reform work in the West. In this, as in the varied circumstances in which she was placed, she was a true helpmeet to her husband, and her enthusiastic devotion to his work and interests could but be an inspirational factor in his success, and this was just as true in the pioneer life in Dakota as in reform work in the East. She was ever the center of attraction in Reynolds, where her death fell as a dark pall upon her late home and upon the whole community in which she lived.

One of the largest furniture houses in the state is that of Welch & Cummings, Nos. 148 and 152 Union street, Lynn. This firm, as they advertise, began business with the idea that the dollar of the mechanic was worth as much as his wealthy neighbor, and that a one price system was the most satisfactory to the buyer and seller. This store has a stock equal to none east of Boston, and contains Walnut, ash and painted chamber sets of all varieties. Parlor suits are made to order on the premises. They have also a large line of rattan chairs, mattresses, etc. If you are about to furnish a parlor either in suit or combination go to Welch & Cummings, as they have a large stock to select from and employ first class workmen, while their price is reasonable.

The attachment to leather splitting machines, which was invented by John A. Enos, and patented May 8, 1883, is now in successful operation on two of the Union Splitting Machines at the shop of Brown & Stanley. A company has been formed for the manufacture and sale of these attachments, called the "Enos Splitting Machine Co."—They are made at the works of the U. S. Pat. Co., Salem, and it is proposed to lease the attachments to the manufacturer at a royalty of a certain sum per annum. We had the pleasure this morning of seeing the machines in operation, and were much interested in the ease with which the work was done. Besides the absolute impossibility of any accident to the operator, the work is done better, and about one third more can be accomplished than by the old method. The attachment appears to be very simple; only two corrugated rollers in place of the old single one. But in this very simplicity is its power. The method of attaching to the old machine is to take out the old roller and insert one of the corrugated rollers in the same bearing. Just in front of this, on a movable bearing, is placed the other roller, which is controlled by a treadle. The side of leather passes between these rollers, the action of the treadle brings the rollers together, at one motion catching the leather and starting the machine. The strain on the leather is uniform, under perfect control of the operator, and two machines with this attachment will easily do the work of three of the old ones.—So that not only in the matter of safety, but of economy as well, it is a desirable machine for our leather manufacturers to have. Applications for its use, and inquiries as to its advantages, are being constantly received by the Company, who are justly enthusiastic over its prospects.

Attention is called to the Hotel Nahant, which is advertised in another column. Long Beach in Lynn is one of the finest on the coast. It has advantages for surf bathing unsurpassed by any beach, and there are fine bathing houses connected with the hotel. Messrs. Soule & Son have entirely remodeled the place, adding some elegantly arranged and newly furnished rooms, from which a fine view of the beach, and a glorious sea breeze can be obtained. The dining hall is new—and the proprietors are ready to serve fish dinners in the best style, both on the American and European plan. That our people who are riding to Lynn will desire to visit this famous beach is beyond question, and we can cheerfully recommend to them this hotel as worthy of patronage.

Many times last year we called attention in these columns to that class of chronic nuisances known as "street hawkers." They go bawling through our streets making day hideous and life a burden to quietly disposed citizens. Why will persons patronize them anyway? they pay no rent, skip all taxes and interfere directly and unfairly with legitimate dealers who do pay taxes and rent. The town authorities ought to do something toward abating what long since passed into the list of unmitigated nuisances.

Mr. Blaine in a private letter, speaking of the liquor question in his State, says: "Intemperance has steadily decreased in the State since the enactment of the Prohibitory law, until now it can be said with truth there is no people of the Anglo-Saxon world among whom so small an amount of intoxicating liquor is consumed as among the 650,000 inhabitants of Maine."

The Fourth in Salem will be celebrated by the usual ringing of bells and the firing of cannon, and there will also be a parade of the Antiques and Horribles in the early morning, band concerts on the common and at the Willows, a regatta on North river, exhibitions for the children at Mechanic hall, —the whole to conclude with a display of fireworks on the common in the evening.

Artists' Materials, Winsor & Newton's Oil and Water Colors, Canvasses, brushes, &c. Also a full line of American, sable and bristle brushes at low prices. 15 per cent. discount to parties purchasing in quantities. Smith & Robinson, 42 Market street, Lynn.—Successors to S. A. Barton.

A GOOD WORK.—In one of the large public schools of Brooklyn are congregated 1,600 scholars, over whose work an energetic lady principal presides. From a farm in the "Buckeye" State she went to Brooklyn to engage in educational work, and make a way in the world. Although transported from the freedom of the farm to the irksome duties and confinement of the school-room her love for the farm has not abated, but, on the contrary, she has endeavored, even in the crowded city, to interest both herself and scholars in the work which pertains to agriculture. She has purchased seeds and distributed them among the pupils; given them instruction in the raising of plants and interested them to such an extent that many of them are now engaged in growing plants and raising seeds. Occasionally reports are tendered showing how the crops are progressing. From her own pocket-book has this energetic woman paid out several hundred dollars for seeds and agricultural books and papers, in order to promote the good work she has on hand. A lively interest has been awakened in the minds of the children, so that they are doing all that they can to forward this enterprise of studying practical farming in a big city. In crowded Brooklyn but little room is to be found for growing plants, so that many of these young farmers have their farms on the house-tops or in back windows. The teacher, like her pupils, is also cultivating her part. Every inch of available soil in the back-yard she has put under cultivation, and she informed us that she even thought of hiring some land lying idle in the next yard. With such energy and enthusiasm attending her work, we think and trust it is bound to succeed. We bring this case before our readers to illustrate to them one method of making school work something besides the dull routine work that it usually is, and at the same time awakening an interest in the youthful mind toward the farm and its work. The farmers do not seek additions to their ranks from among the broken-down ministers of the professions, etc., who turn to farming as a last resort, but from among the youths who are full of life and activity, and who add brains to their work. Tens of thousands of schools distributed over these United States might fittingly follow in the footsteps of this Brooklyn contemporary. The amount of good that would result therefrom is incalculable, while the other studies need suffer nothing in consequence. In traversing the country how many bare, neglected school-yards do we pass by, which might be changed into really beautiful grounds, were it the fancy of the teachers to interest themselves and their pupils in the work!—Rural New Yorker.

NEWSPAPERS.—Daniel Webster said: "Small is the sum that is required to patronize a newspaper, and well rewarded is the patron, I care not how humble and unpretending the gazette which he takes. It's next to impossible to fill a sheet with printed matter without putting something into it worth the subscription price. Every parent whose son is away from home should supply him with a newspaper. I well remember what a marked difference there was between those of my schoolmates who had, and those who did not have access to newspapers. Other things being equal, the first were always decidedly superior to the last in debate, composition, and intelligence.

ARRANGEMENT OF CUT FLOWERS.—I saw the other day a device in this way so simple and pretty, that I made a note of it. It consisted of a circular piece of cork, 6in. in diameter and 1-4 in. thick, perforated with holes like the nose of a watering-pot. Into these the flowers were neatly arranged, and the cork floated in a saucer of water, where it formed a pretty object in the centre of a small table. For small flowers with delicate stalks this plan answers well, and also where a low flat system of table decoration is required. Let me add that for table decoration, the beautiful primula cortusoides amœna, when grown as a pot plant, does well.—Gardening Illustrated.

She slid, she slid. Anon she glid,
And sideways gave a whirl;
Aguide she gode, and then she glode,
This brave but foolish girl.
Hurrah! Hoopla! who ever saw
A girl that could do better?
A dash, a crash, 'twas awful rash,
But the roller skates upset her.

Naumkeag Encampment No. 13, I. O. O. F., elected the following officers on Thursday evening last:—George W. Grant, C. P.; Francis A. Newhall, H. P.; Frederick J. Gifford, S. W.; Amos J. Vincent, J. W.; Walter S. Harris, Treasurer; Edward B. Phillips, Scribe. The Chief Patriarch elect is the youngest member but one in the Encampment.

How beautiful is youth! how bright it gleams
With its illusions, aspirations, dreams!
Book of beginnings, story without end
Each maid a heroine, and each man a friend! —Longfellow.

TO THE PUBLIC!

We have always possessed the idea that the poor man's hard earned dollar should purchase just as much as a like amount of his wealthy neighbor.—WE BELIEVE IT. WE ACT UPON IT. Three years ago it was hard to convince customers that a firm in the FURNITURE business would or could make such a departure. WE DID, and our business to-day is a pleasing monument of its kindly reception by the people of Lynn, Swampscott, Saugus, Nahant, Marblehead, Peabody, Danvers, Lynnfield, Salem, &c., to whom we are more than thankful.

A new signal is in use on the Eastern railroad. It consists of a torch, burning red, which burns just ten minutes, when it explodes a torpedo and goes out. If a train is considerably behind time, one of these is left between the rails, and the engineer of a following train, seeing it, stops until the explosion occurs, when of course the first train has ten minutes start.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The last census of Massachusetts accords to Peabody 4,539 males and 4,489 females, or 50 more males than females. We have increased our population since 1870, 1685 souls; we have 2,008 families in 1,548 dwellings; we have parents of foreign birth to the number of 1710; we have 5 persons between 86 and 90 years of age, and one over 90; we are credited with 94 professional persons, 54 males and 40 females; we have 1685 engaged in mechanical industries. The principal business is leather and there are employed 959 persons, and with the exception of Salem, the largest number in the county; we have 51 shoe makers and 307 farmers; we have 181 persons over ten years of age that cannot write, and 156 that cannot read; we have 109 farms from which 1,893 tons of hay are cut;262,291 gallons of milk are raised, and 1,350 pounds of butter is made. The number of manufacturing establishments is given as 53, with an average number of employes of 1,195, and the total wages paid in a year are $543,453, with an invested capitol of $1,063,670; the stock used is valued at $2,289,254, while the value of the products is $4,268,344 annually.

We are in receipt of an official programme of the exercises at Commencement of Bates College, in Lewiston, Me. The class of '83 numbered twenty-three, three of the number being young ladies, and the valedictorian being Miss Ellen R. Little, the second assistant of our Peabody High School. It is worthy of mention that the Salutatory and Valedictory were both delivered by young ladies—both, also, residing in Lewiston. Miss Little's subject was "Over-taught and Under-educated," and the Lewiston Journal refers to it in the following very complimentary terms: "Miss Little's aim was to show that whereas the schools, our colleges of to-day, turn out many able and fully educated men and women, yet, in comparison with those of former times, we find many of the latter far in advance of the scholars of to-day. The inference must be that there is something defective in the complex system of modern teaching. Her treatment of the subject was thoughtful and pithy. It was one of the best parts ever delivered at a Bates Commencement.

The old "Fitzhenry" steam leather dressing machine which has been lying idle for the past three years in the basement of the Elliot tannery on Foster street, has been fixed up by Mr. J. O. Callahan, who tested it last week by giving one of his best workmen ten sides to set out and having ten sides set out by the machine. The man gained 5 1-2 feet stretch, while the "Fitzhenry" gained 12 1-4 feet; a gain of 6 3-4 feet in favor of the old machine; which figured on 300 sides at 17 cents per foot amounts to $34.80 per day. This is one of the oldest Steam Fitzhenry machines in use.

A man who would sell liquor to Anthony Garvey, should have his license revoked. This morning Anthony was around among his friends, collecting a little money for the Fourth, and meeting with better success than he probably anticipated, he invested a part of it in liquor and imagining he had received his appointment as a police officer, he struck a fellow on Foster street with the buckle of a strap making a painful wound. The police took him in charge and made him go home.

Unity Camp, No. 5, I. O. O. F., have arranged for a grand ocean excursion to Minot's Ledge Light and Nantasket beach on Tuesday, July 10. Music will be furnished by the Salem Brass Band. The steamer "Twilight," belonging to the Boston & Hingham Steamboat Co., has been chartered for the occasion. Tickets for the round trip have been placed at $1, and they can be obtained of Wm. F. Sawyer, D. B. Lord, Chas. Bliss, and other members of the camp in this town.

At a meeting of the water board last evening it was voted to extend the water pipes 1600 feet on Lynnfield street, and put in two hydrants; to extend them 2600 feet on Lynn street and put in three hydrants; 400 feet on Beckett street with one hydrant; also to lay 300 feet of pipe on Swampscott avenue, and put in a hydrant. The board will also connect the pipes on Foster street with those on Franklin street, making three connections across the square, thus leaving the town better protected.

We are in receipt of the first number of this season of the White Mountain Echo, which is well known to all tourists in Bethlehem, N. H., and its vicinity. It is published by Markinfield Addey, and in the first number are two illustrated sketches, "The Silver Cascade" in the Crawford Notch, and "The New Flume," giving an account of the hurling of this giant boulder from its resting place, both from the pen of Charlotte E. Ricker, of this town.

There was a large attendance at the Baptist church last Sunday to hear the new pastor, Rev. C. H. Chipman, address his people for the first time since assuming his new relation. The church was handsomely decorated; on the chandeliers on each side of the pulpit were arranged very pretty ferns with a center piece of red. A large bouquet graced a table on each side under the chandeliers; in the centre of the desk was a bouquet of roses with a mat of ferns with a red centre piece on each corner; on the platform in front of the desk was a handsome mound of ferns and flowers and just above it on the front of the desk was the word "Welcome" in white daisies; to the left was a fine basket of roses and on the preacher's table a small hand bouquet.

He read for his scriptural lesson a part of the second chapter of Luke and the sixth chapter of John, taking his text from the 49th verse of the former chapter, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business." These are the words of the most wonderful child born of woman. It is not uncommon to hear of a forward child—they often ask questions that even mature minds cannot answer. But in these words there is a conception of thought, the maturest intellect could not perceive; these are the first recorded words of this child. Is this not enough to teach us that Jesus was no ordinary child? No wonder Mary, His mother, often said to herself, Jesus is a strange child, and even as the years rolled on, and when only twelve years of age they lost Him and sought for Him three days and found Him among the doctors and when they questioned Him, His reply was, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business." It is hard to tell how much the Lord meant by this answer, how much of it was from man and how much of it from God, but my brethren, I wish to draw your attention to a few practical thoughts this morning.

First, it gives a new revelation to God. My Father's business, was it Joseph's business? No; He meant God, My Father, they are the words of which the religion of God is; their import has been unseen; when Christ uttered them, the world learned for the first time of the Fatherhood of God; yes, God's fatherhood to God and man's sonhood to God. Ages before they saw inaccessible in its vastness a God, but none that thought of the Fatherhood of God; even the Jews had no knowledge of the Fatherhood of God, and up to the hour of the text had served him in fear and not in love, not as a father to share his love, "My Father" and all was changed out of death into light, God and man, father and child. God stands beside man, is a father to us to-day, a father of love and blessing, and we have a right to say "Our Father which art in heaven." When Christ uttered those words He touched the key stone of His great work; those childish lips set in motion one of the great fundamental truths—"God is my Father." A great epoch in history had been struck, and the world knew of the Father.

Second, we can learn that man as God's child can render a service to the Father. How teaches us the text? "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business." My Father's business—a great work, not the pastime of an hour, but a father's business and His omnipotent hand has shaped its course; the redemption of all men and no less than the restoration of lost manhood, and the giving of strength to resist evil and finally that all may walk the streets of the new Jerusalem and sit down in glory with the Father. He who is God's child can render him a service no matter how humble, and He has a claim on the service of you and me and every other man, and He teaches us that He has a work for every one of us to do; each of us has a special duty and in His service there is just the part we can do. We, who are parents know how much care and anxiety our children cause us, but each act of love brings to us compensation; how much more is God's love which He gives us. He has a work for all to do, that every man can be of service to Him.

In conclusion, the patience of God in His work. He never ceases to labor, every moment must be used for His work. This is the spirit that should characterize the child of God, but how unlike our Master we have been. The stars are the work of God's hand, they perform the work given them to do, the beasts of the field and all nature fulfil this end; shall not each one of us do our share? I come to you, my people, with no conviction of what my service will be to you and with no promises I placed myself in my Master's hands and He seemed to say "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business." And whether I make a success of my mission here or not must rest with each one of you; as children of one common father, see that your part of the work is performed; if we work together God's blessing will rest upon us, but let these words be repeated over and over, until they burn in your soul, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business." Amen.

SOUTH PEABODY.—The question is asked: Is there a field driver in So. Peabody? If so, why does he not attend to duty and look after the horses and cows which are allowed to roam at large on the streets there and which have become a nuisance?

Mr. John Keith has been painting his store in the latest fashionable shades.

Mr. Daniel R. Davis still remains unconscious and grave doubts are entertained of his recovery.

The travel of the Lynn and Boston Horse Railroad is still great. Last Sabbath from one car we noted eighteen transfers to the Naumkeag R. R. to the Willows, and this, we are told, is a fair average of the traffic.

Don't forget the strawberry festival at the vestry this evening.

Mr. Charles Brown is quite ill at his residence on County street.

The store occupied by Mr. W. E. Reed has been painted by Blaney in the latest æsthetic colors, and the good looks on the outside are only equaled by the good things inside.

We are pleased to learn that the wife of Rev. J. W. Colwell is recovering from her recent illness.

A handsome grey squirrel was captured in the woods above the Alms House last Sunday, by some boys who were hunting for bird's nests.

A son of James Connors stepped on a piece of glass last Thursday, cutting and poisoning his foot, so that a physician was called to dress it Sunday.

So. Peabody Sunday school will hold a strawberry festival this evening.

PERSONAL.—Mr. Arthur Pinder is visiting his parents in town.

The Misses Towne, school teachers at Dover, N. H., are visiting their mother here.

Mr. Arthur Sim and Frank I. Proctor, college boys, are among us again.

Mr. Chas. J. Crowley has returned to his Kansas City home.

Miss Hattie Sawyer was present at the High school reception, and met her many former school companions.

John B. Wilson, of Harvard, is again seen on our streets.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. French started yesterday morning for Saratoga and a trip down the Hudson.

John C. Blaney and wife were in town Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. J. Winchester are stopping at Marblehead Neck.

PENALTY FOR SIN.—June 29, Edward Stanuard, second drunk, $9.83.
Wm. Dalton, third drunk, $14.83.
John Keefe, drunk $5.83. Sent to Salem Jail.
30, John Farrell, drunk, $5.83.
Chas. H. Trask, drunk, $5.83.
July 2, Joseph Webb, drunk, $5.83.
John Kelley for malicious mischief, $5. and costs.
Thomas Fitzgibbons, drunk, $5.83.
July 3, John Hayes, drunk, $5.83.
John Donovan, Boston, drunk, $5.83.

HIS OPINION.

IN CLEAR SENTENCES AN AUTHORITY ADDS HIS OWN TO THE POPULAR JUDGMENT.

191 West Tenth Street,
New York, Aug. 11, 1880.

MESSRS. SEABURY & JOHNSON:
I am slow to pin my faith to any new curative agent. BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER has won my good opinion. I find it an exceptionally cleanly plaster to use and rapid in its action. Many tests of its qualities in my own family, and among my patients, have convinced me that there is no other single article so valuable for popular use, none so helpful in cases of Lame Back, Local Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Congestion of the Bronchial Tubes and Lungs and Lumbago. You may feel free to use my name. Very truly yours,
H. H. KANE, M. D.,
Physician-in-Chief of the De Quincy Home.
Price of the CAPCINE 25 cents.

Miscellaneous.

Another week has lengthened the death-roll of those who perished on the lake during the recent storms. The Sun is not an obituary sheet, but it has a heart and a wellspring of sympathy in common with the rest of mankind, for those who have looked so anxiously for the return of those who did not come, for those whose pallid lips have moved in the unanswered prayer for the safety of those dear ones who, even then, were struggling with the storms, or had already succumbed and gone down beneath the angry waters of the lake. It was a fearful night and fearful demands were made upon the brave men who "go down to the sea in ships." How many brave fellows, as they struggled with the fierce, wicked, and angry waves, that fought around and over their frail craft, must have thought of homes they were destined never again to enter, of loved ones into whose faces they would never look again on earth. How many trembling lips, hidden behind rough beards, have moved in some half forgotten prayer, as death beckoned them over the rail. How many strong hands and hearts grew weak and faint as the night went on, and the merciless winds piled the dark waters higher and higher around them. Many a brave man, with rough, bronzed face and calloused hands, went down that night. Many a beardless boy was flung by the mad waves across the intervening years that lie between boyhood and eternity. Many a good ship, that only a few hours before sailed so proudly out upon her course, ere morning broke had either gone down or was a broken down, lifeless thing, beating helpless about at the mercy of the raging storm. To all those hearts made desolate by death, to all those homes from which the sunlight of some happy face has been thus suddenly withdrawn, the Sun would offer consolation that words but feebly express. —Peck's Sun.

The post-master general has issued an order to first and second class post-offices cautioning postmasters at such offices not to leave their post of duty without a written permit from the department, and that any disobedience of the order will be punished by removal. It begins to look as though the new postmaster general was business from the word go. Postmasters will now be obliged to stay at home and read postal cards, and drudge along like any of the clerks in the office, and let some one else catch all the fish and go to the picnics and Sunday school excursions. It will get so after a while that a postmaster's life will be no greater snap than that of being an editor.—Peck's Sun.

HAY FEVER.—I have been afflicted for twenty years, during the months of August and September, with Hay Fever, and have tried various remedies without relief. I was induced to try Ely's Cream Balm; have used it with favorable results, and can confidently recommend it to all similarly afflicted. ROBERT W. TOWNLEY, (ex-Mayor) Elizabeth, N. J.

I have been a Hay Fever sufferer for three years; have often heard Ely's Cream Balm spoken of in the highest terms; did not take much stock in it because of the many quack medicines. A friend persuaded me to try the Balm and I did so with wonderful success.—This recommendation you can use for the benefit of Hay Fever sufferers. T. S. GEER, Syracuse, N. Y. Price 50 cents.

It is still a mystery to us how many laboring men working upon small wages are able to pay for their regular drinks and support their families. Those cases are not rare where the liquor bill of the husband and father amounts to more than the entire outlay for the family's maintenance. In too many instances his bibulous habits costs them the closest self-denial and sacrifice where it does not plunge them into actual poverty. Viewed in whatever light, there is no redeeming feature to the business.

The following is a general description of the design for the new two-cent stamp, which comes into use the first of October: On a tablet is suspended an incised shield decorated with beadwork, oval, forming a frame-work surrounding a copy of Houdon's life cast of Washington. At the base of the oval figure is the word "two," on the left the word "cents." On the right surrounding the upper part of the oval appear the words "United States postage." The color of the stamp is metallic red. The stamp is a handsome piece of workmanship.

Dr. John D. Long, Dr. Thomas Talbot, Dr. Wm. B. Washburn, Dr. Wm. Clafflin, Dr. Alexander H. Rice, Dr. Geo. S. Boutwell, Dr. Nathaniel P. Banks, Dr. Wm. Gaston and Dr. Henry J. Gardner, are the living ex-governors of Massachusetts.

Mother (noticing her son's greediness): "George, you should always leave the table feeling that you could eat a little more." George: "I do, mother."

TALMAGE ON HUSKING.

EARS OF CORN THAT DON'T MIND IT, AND OTHERS THAT DO.

"My hearers," shouted Rev. Dr. Talmage from his pulpit in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, on a bright Sunday morning last November, "going at the rate of forty miles an hour last Wednesday, I got this sermon on husking. God has arranged that the ear and the husk shall be parted. Every rheumatic pain is but a thrust of the husking-peg: every neuralgic twinge is only a twist of the husker. Thus he takes away what hinders your soul's liberation."

Poetry is permitted to preachers; but the fact is, nobody wants to be husked nor does any one believe that the body is to the soul what the husk is to the corn. On the other hand, Nature teaches us to fight this husking process. Hence most people are thankful for whatever can abate those "rheumatic pains" and "neuralgic twinges."

That, at least, was the view taken of the subject by M. Alfred Baer, a French gentleman, who, at his pleasant home, Greenmont, near Sing Sing, N. Y., said, the other day, to a reporter:

"My life has at times been rendered almost intolerable by Rheumatism. I had tried different remedies without result. But PARKER'S GINGER TONIC gave me great satisfaction. You may tell Messieurs Hiscox & Co., of New York—the proprietors—that I certify to its perfect efficacy, as the Tonic has completely restored my health. Please say, also, that they are welcome to use my name, and ask them to accept my thanks," added the courteous Parisian.

Rheumatism is a symptom of kidney disease, not an affection of the joints or muscles. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC purifies the Blood, and acts with a success beyond that of all other preparations in cases of Dyspepsia, Liver, Kidney and Stomach disorders, and in common Coughs and Colds. Prices, 50 cents and $1 per bottle. The latter the more economical.

WHY HE PAID.—They were talking about gas and comparing gas bills, and finally the bald-headed man laid aside his paper and observed:

'Well, I had only two burners going in my office for an hour each evening during January, and my gas bill for the month was seventeen dollars.'

'Monstrous! Highway robbery! Worse than pocket-picking!' exclaimed as many different voices, and some one asked what he did about it.

'Why, I paid it,' he replied.

'You did! Didn't you know it was a down right swindle?'

'Y-e-s, I thought it pretty steep, but you see I'm a stockholder in the company, and anxions for a dividend.'—Wall St. News.

Too good to keep: The genial agent of the New London Northern Railroad at this station had just finished reading a communication from headquarters last Tuesday afternoon, inclosing some special-rate tickets for the members of a Boston band which was going to Amherst, when he was accosted by a gold-bedecked personage with the inquiry: "Have you the tickets for Amherst here?" Taking him to be the drum major of the aforesaid organization, the agent asked if this was the band referred to in his communication. "Well, I don't know about our being a band," was the prompt reply, "but by——we've got a fellow with us that just makes 'em all dance!" and looking over the shoulders of the chief of staff the astonished agent beheld the majestic form and familiar features of our own and only—Gov. Benj. F. Butler. They got the tickets.—Palmer Journal.

THE GREAT NORTHWEST.—The great increase in travel to the Northwest, has forced the "Famous Albert Lea Route" to put upon its line magnificent Dining Cars, in which passengers will be served meals second in quality to no first-class hotel, for the small sum of seventy-five cents each.

The Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway, which controls this route, has always maintained a reputation for giving travelers first-class meals on its Dining Cars, and in putting on this line the same class of cars, it fills a want that the traveling public will appreciate.

"The Albert Lea Route" is carrying a very large share of the Northwestern travel, and, although early in the season, has commenced to sell tourists' tickets to the various pleasure resorts in a volume sufficiently large to guarantee an immense summer traffic.

The steamboat train on the Norwich Line leaves Boston at 7 P. M., and the boat from New York at 6 15 P. M. This is very convenient and adds greatly to the popularity of the line. The steamer City of Worcester runs every other night.

ONE OF THE ELECT.—Cleveland, Ohio. The Plain Dealer reports that Hon. Martin A. Foran, congressman elect from the Cleveland, Ohio, district, has used St. Jacobs Oil in his family and has always found it safe and reliable, and it afforded him great relief to a lame knee.

A remedy for a sharp attack of rheumatism is to keep the painful part of the body as near the fire as possible for an hour or so. This sets the blood in circulation, accomplishing the same results as the treatment known as the "movement cure."

New York Chinese laundrymen nearly killed a Celestial brother who undertook to work at lower rates than the accepted scale. Evidently the Mongolians are becoming civilized.

KEEP YOUR SCALP CLEAN.

The best thing out for removing Dandruff is

HEYLINGBERG'S

EUREKA DANDRUFF REMOVER.

It has been thoroughly tested by hundreds of gentlemen, Ladies, and Children, and we have plenty of testimonials of its good results. It is cooling, removes Dandruff, invigorates the roots of the hair, and will quickly produce a strong and beautiful growth in all cases where the roots of the hair are not fully dead, and will stop this unpleasant itching; in fact it is the best hair dressing in use. It is not greasy or sticky, and is warranted free of all oils, and poisins, and will prove the cleanest, safest and most economical Hair Dressing to be found.

Peabody, Mass., Nov. 18, 1881.

Mr. J. J. Heylingberg, Dear Sir:—Both myself and wife have used your Eureka Dandruff Remover for some time, with the most satisfactory results, and recommend it as being indispensable for the toilet. Yours truly,
FRANK A. BRAGDON.

Many more testimonials furnished if desired.

KIDNEY AND BLADDER COMPLAINTS OF MANY YEARS DURATION—HIS WORD GOOD AS GOLD—CASE OF CITY ASSESSOR FRANCIS GOMARD, 89 SUMNER STREET, LOWELL, MASS.

"His word is as good as a bank note at any bank in Lowell, and I know it," was the opinion of a well known citizen in speaking of City Assessor Francis Gomard. Your reporter found Mr. Gomard at his pleasant home, which, with many others, adorns Sumner street and fronts the charming park of South Common. Mr. Gomard said, "I had been, as many of my friends in Lowell know, a great sufferer from kidney and urinary troubles for a long time. My physician said it was the result of diseased kidneys and enlargement of the prostate gland. I had suffered terribly, and although my doctor's treatment had been the best which this city afforded, I got no better. I said finally, 'Doctor, it's no use. You have done all that is in your power to do, I know that; but I must get help from some other source or die.' Finally I was induced to try Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, a medicine which had been recommended very highly for kidney diseases. I received help at once. It has acted like a charm with me. Why so? Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is an honest preparation, and I know it. I didn't think anything would help me, but this has given me better health than any medicine ever prescribed for me. I have recommended it to ever so many of my friends in the city of Lowell, and with the same result. They think there is nothing like Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY."

What Mr. Gomard says can be depended upon, as any one acquainted with the gentleman knows.

COUNTY COMM'RS' NOTICE.

Peabody, April 19th, 1883.

To the Honorable Board of County Commissioners for the county of Essex.

The undersigned respectfully represent that the public convenience and necessity require that that part of Aborn street, in Peabody, between the residence of the late William Sutton and the corner of Aborn and Sutton streets, should be widened and straightened.

We therefore petition your honorable body to view the premises and to take such action in the matter as the public convenience and necessity may seem to you to require.

GEO. C. PIERCE and others.

Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

Essex, ss.

Court of County Commissioners, April Term, A D. 1883, held by adjournment at Salem, in said county.

On the Petition aforesaid, ordered, That said petitioners give notice to all persons and corporations interested therein, that said Commissioners will meet at Sutton's Wool Shop, in said Peabody, on Monday the ninth day of July next, at one and one half o'clock, P. M.—by publishing an attested copy of said Petition, and of this Order thereon, in the Peabody Press, a newspaper printed in Peabody, three weeks successively, the last publication to be fourteen days at least before the said ninth day of July And also by serving the Town Clerk of Peabody with an attested copy of said Petition and this Order, thirty days at least, and by posting up an attested copy thereof in two public places in said town, fourteen days at least before the said ninth day of July, at which time and place said Commissioners will proceed to view the premises, and take such order in relation to the Prayer of said Petition, as by law they may be authorized to do.

ALFRED A. ABBOTT, Clerk.

A true copy of Petition and Order thereon.

Attest,

ALFRED A. ABBOTT, Clerk.

MORTGAGEE'S SALE.

By virtue of a power of sale contained in a certain mortgage deed given by Dennis Lawler of Salem, in the County of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, to Simon P. Buxton of Peabody in said Commonwealth, dated Jan. 11, 1872 and recorded at Essex Registry of Deeds, South District, in book 844, leaf 123, for breach of condition contained in said mortgage, the undersigned, —said mortgagee—will sell at public auction at the office of Farnham & Weare in said Peabody, on Thursday, the twelfth day of July next, 1883, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon the premises conveyed by said mortgage deed, namely: A certain lot of land with the buildings thereon, situated in said Peabody, it being lot numbered forty-three (43) on "Plan of Lots in Peabody (Plan No. 2), belonging to William D. Northend by Charles A. Putnam, Surveyor," dated August 30, 1870, and recorded in the Registry of Deeds for said County of Essex, South District, Book 802, to which reference is to be had. Said lot is fifty-five feet on North street; ninety feet on land of E. S. Poor; fifty-five feet on lot forty one; and ninety-three and one-half feet on lot forty-two.

Terms made known at the sale.

Miscellaneous.

SOMETHING ABOUT CAMEOS.

"The onyx stone, on which the most valuable cameos are cut, is found in such plenty on the Uruguay River in Brazil that ships often take it for ballast," said Louis Zœllner, the Broadway cameo cutter. "Some of it has been found in Germany, where much of the cutting is done. The market is flooded with cheap and imperfect cameos, the work of apprentices, yet there is a fair demand for new work at good prices, especially for portraits. The art of cameo cutting is very old, and some of the specimens of Roman work done 2,000 years ago are exquisite in tracery and design. They were produced by an extraordinary amount of labor unaided by the modern improvements in tools. Such work was then done for monarchs or very wealthy persons, and a cutting requiring a year was a common thing. The same quality of work is now within the reach of persons of moderate means. Three fair looking cameo cuttings, suitable for mounting as breastpin and earrings may be bought for $8. But cameo portraits cost from $50 to $250, according to size, and the stone for the latter would be worth about $70.

"A raised cutting on any stone is called a cameo; when the device is sunk it is called an intaglio. The onyx is preferred for cameos above all stones, because it comes in layers of two colors. The combinations are black and white, black and cream, red and white, and dark brown, called the sardonyx. One advantage of a cameo portrait is that it will last forever. The stone is so hard that it can be cut only with diamond dust. The process of cutting consists of holding the stone up to revolving drills whose soft steel ends are covered with diamond dust. The utmost patience, and caution, and delicate manipulation are required to grind off the upper layer of stone. A mistake is fatal to the work. No steel can be made hard enough to drill the onyx. Even chrome steel will not do it and that is so hard that a drill made from it will cut through an ordinary file. No acid will affect the onyx, and it will stand the greatest heat of the furnace if the heat is applied gradually, so as to prevent cracking. Some cuttings went through the great Bond street fire and were found in the ruins unharmed."

Among the portraits in Mr. Zœllner's collection are those of the late President Garfield, William Cullen Bryant, Mrs. Scott-Siddons, and the Rabbi Gottheil. He has one cutting of the unveiling of Cleopatra before Cæsar, which shows exquisite drapery, and even the figuring of tapestry on the walls. Although the faces of the figures are almost infinitesimal, the expression put into them is striking. The aid of a powerful magnifying glass is required to see the beauty of the work, which has been done in the odd hours of years. The cutting is valued at $1,000.

AN OLD CHURCH IN ARIZONA.

The most interesting of all sights is the grand old mission church of San Xavier, nine miles from Tucson, on the Papago reservation. This mission was founded in 1654, when the Papago (Pima) Indians were supposed to have accepted the Christian religion. The church of San Xavier was begun about the year 1700 and finished in 1798, excepting one of the towers, which is yet unfinished. The style of architecture is Moorish. The lines are wonderfully perfect. It is in the form of a cross, 70x115 feet, and has a well formed dome. A balustrade surmounts all the walls. The front is covered with scroll work, intricate, interesting and partly decayed. Over the front is a life-size bust of St. Xavier. The enterior is literally covered with frescoes. The altar is adorned with gilded scroll work.

The statues are as numerous as the paintings. The tiling on the floor is much defaced and but little is left. That of the roof is nearly all as perfect as when laid. Its manufacture is one of the lost arts. There is a chime of four good sized bells in the tower that have a soft, sweet sound. Ascending to the roof, you walk up long, narrow stairs in solid walls. But one can go at a time. The same is true in going to the gallery of the church.

It is marvelous that so long ago, and in such a place, such architecture, ornaments, paintings, and sculpture were so well executed. You are admitted by two of the Papago signiors, who have it in charge. The admittance fee is 50 cents for each person.—Denver Tribune.

GOLD FIELDS OF NEW YORK.

The first "clean-up" ever made by a gold-mining company in New York State took place a few days ago on the north branch of the West Canada Creek, in Fulton County. Wide attention has been attracted within the past two years to the gold fields of Fulton and Hamilton counties, and many claims have been taken up. The company which made the "clean-up" has a mill running and had taken out about two hundred tons of gold-bearing gravel. The yield of gold was found to be about $3 75 a ton, and the cost of mining and milling is said to be at present about eighty seven cents a ton. It is expected that not less than six mills will be in operation before the close of the spring. The metal is of a bright yellow, resembling Australian gold more than it resembles that obtained on the western side of this continent. It is claimed by those interested that the Northern New York gold fields are "no longer an experiment."

At a recent meeting of the London Physical Society, Mr. Braham gave an experimental demonstration of the vorticel theory of the formation of the solar system by rotating a drop of castor oil and chloroform in water until it threw off other drops as planets.

Writing Papers. A large assortment of writing papers by the pound. Parties wishing such will do well to give us a call. Smith & Robinson, 42 Market street, Lynn. Successors to S. A. Barton.

Two of the pupils that successfully entered the High school from Mr. Barnes' school, were promoted from the second class during the winter term, and two who were advised not to try succeeded in getting in.

Mr. D. J. Long was last evening elected first assistant of Steamer 2, in place of Mr. W. H. Hildreth, resigned. J. A. P. Sumner was elected to fill the vacancy in the company. A vote giving Mr. H. an honorable discharge from the department was passed.

One of the candidates who did not receive admission to our high school was from Lynnfield, and although attending school here for some time lacked the thorough schooling received in our lower branches. She came from the lower branches.

A marble slab, weighing probably 150 lbs., in the rear of this office, was pulled over last Saturday by a lad named Mally, and he narrowly escaped injury. The slab struck a piece of plank, breaking the fall, or the boys foot would have been crushed.

The Steamer Empire State entirely refitted has resumed her trips from Battery Wharf. To-morrow (July 4) the trip to the North Shore will be taken. Thursday to the Isles of Shoals. Friday to Provincetown and Saturday the steamer is chartered to the Universalists. Music by the Empire State Band.

Saturday evening at about six o'clock P. M., two freight cars were backed off the track into Central street, obstructing the walk, and it was some time, and attended with considerable labor, before they were got off the street. A bumper might be placed at the end of the track and thus avoid this difficulty.

Mr. James M. Ward has in his possession a rose bush that, on the thirtieth of April, was growing in England. It blooms a very handsome dark red rose, large and fragrant. It is a cross between a tea and common rose, and the color will not fade. It blooms twice a year.

A Peabody gentleman has manufactured a cradle that will rock by the slightest motion of the infant. While it is awake it rocks itself, and in the night when it wakes up it of course rocks itself and thinking its mother is rocking it, goes right to sleep again. Big thing.

The fifteenth anniversary of the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. John Osborn was very pleasantly celebrated at their residence on Washington street last evening. The host and hostess were the recipients of many elegant presents, and the occasion was altogether a very enjoyable one.

The following is the Chief of police's report for the month of June: Whole number of arrests 43; drunkenness 22; assault 5; truancy 4; malicious mischief 3; larceny 2; stealing a ride 2; keeping liquor with intent to sell 2; vagrancy 1; disturbance of peace 1; using profane and indecent language on the street 1.

Conductor Geo. Buxton of the Naumkeag Street railway has attached an arrangement entirely his own, to the ticket register on his car, so that the passenger, who takes hold of it by mistake for the bell to stop the car, cannot register a fare. George has no patent on it, and other conductors can have it if they want it.

The Annual Reunion of Company C., 5th Regt., Mass. Vols., will take place on Thursday, July 26th, at the Relay House. Nahant. Barges will start from G. A. R. Hall at 2 o'clock. The following committee have the matter in charge. Wm. F. Pingree, F. A. Pemberton, Wm. H. Hildreth, P. L. Winchester, Geo. F. Barnes.

A Firemen's Muster, to which companies from all parts of New England are invited, is to be held at Portsmouth, N. H., and continue three days, Aug. 28, 29, 30. Steam engines, hand engines and hose carriages will be allowed to compete for prizes. Which one of our companies will bear off the palm?

Mr. Geo. Stevens is under obligations to Supt. Ferguson, of the Naumkeag Street Railway Co., for the lettering on one of the curtains in his new office. The other will be similarly treated by Supt. Foster, of the Lynn and Boston horse railroad, who will also furnish a new sign soon to be placed in position.

The M. E. Sunday Schools of this town and Tapleyville unite together and go on their annual picnic to Chebacco pond, Wednesday, July 11.—Quint's barges will convey the party to the grove. It is a pleasant ride and it is desirable to have all members of the congregation and Sunday School go. Be on hand Wednesday morning at half past seven.

The interest in base ball waxes hotter and hotter and large numbers attend the matches in Boston and Danvers. At the latter place last Saturday the Danvers nine beat the Whiting & Son nine of Boston by a score of 8 to 7. Arrangements have been made to have the Danvers nine play the Bostons and Detroits. They play the Stars to-morrow morning.

Washington Union of the Equitable Aid Union have elected the following officers: President, Geo. A. Whitney; vice President, R. F. Zeigler; treasurer, Geo. E. Lewis; secretary, Wm. B. Farrington; acct., James S. Paul; aux., John M. Bradford; chaplain, Richard E. Smith; warden, John Ruth; sentinel, N. M. Quint; watchman, Starr C. Hewitt.

Rev. Mr. Chipman, the new pastor of the Baptist Church, is a graduate of Brown University, of the class of '75, and of the Rochester Theological School, of Rochester, N. Y. From Theological School he went directly to Davisville, R. I., where he was settled Jan. 1, 1877, and where he has remained until called by the Baptist Church of this town.

"Jack" Melody performed the dangerous task, last Saturday morning, of climbing to the very top of the flagstaff and placing the halyards in position in the truck just below the ball.—He was just twelve minutes performing the feat and received five dollars for it. A large number in the vicinity of the square watched his movements with great interest.

The Georgetown Advocate says:—Dr. Geo. M. Frost, of Peabody, drove to Merrimac through this town the other day. Forgetful of the fact that Rocks bridge was undergoing repairs, he undertook to cross at that point, and was obliged to return to Groveland bridge, making an extra drive of eight miles. On his return he rested in Georgetown an hour.

Last Sunday Chief Peasley captured about three quarts of beer from the widow of the late Thomas Lillis on Wallis street. There were several men sitting at the table drinking beer, when the officer entered. A pipe had been put in, connecting the saloon with the room above, and here the ardent was dispersed to a thirsty crowd of, we presume she will say, invited guests.

The reception given by the graduating class of the Peabody High School last Friday night was a very successful affair. About 225 were present. A Promenade Concert was given by the Salem Cadet Band lasting until about 9.30, when the grand march, led off by E. L. McDonald and Miss Annie P. Smith, was begun. A collation was served during the evening, and the members of the School Board also visited the hall.

On Thursday evening, July 5, a reception will be given in the Baptist Vestry for the Rev. Mr. Chipman and family. All are cordially invited to be present, and it is hopod that a large number will avail themselves of this opportunity to become acquainted with the new pastor. There will be singing by the choir, and readings by the young people connected with the society. Ice cream and cake will be offered for sale. All come.

Mr. Arthur Huntington, who is visiting in this town, was driving a stable team returning from a visit to the Danvers Insane Asylum last Thursday, when, going down the hill leading to the Asylum, the reins of the harness broke. The horse started to run, but was reined to one side and stopped by Mr. Henderson, who jumped from the carriage, without doing injury to either Mr. H. or the team.

The Beverly Citizen says of a former resident here: At the meeting of the fire engineers last Tuesday evening, a card of thanks was received from Mr. Chas. A. Lawrence of the Beverly Pottery for the very efficient service performed by the department at the burning of his works, accompanying the letter with a view of the kiln, (taken after the fire) for each company in the department.

Work on the new Essex County Atlas is progressing finely and it will probably be issued about the first of next January. The part relating to Peabody will be illustrated by the business places of a number of our manufacturers, also by several residences, including the residence of Mrs. Eliza Sutton on Main street and the elegant summer residence with its surroundings of Francis H. Appleton, Esq., in the western part of the town.

Mr. John A. Enos, in company with Frank B. Copeland, have had allowed on the 25th inst. a patent on a fire escape. A model of this machine is being made at Mr. Zina Goodale's, of Salem. It is made of iron, will take up about the same room as a sewing machine cover, and can be made quite ornamental. On the inside is a fireproof bag with a steel tape attached, and all the occupants of a room have to do is to get inside and the weight carries them safely to the ground. One of them will carry about 2200 pounds.

From the report of the Engineers at the pumping station we glean the following statistics: For the month of June the whole number of gallons of water pumped was 16,889,144; the number of pounds of coal, including firing and banking, 44,706; the average number of gallons per day, 562,971; the average number of gallons to a pound of coal, 377 7-10. Last year in June the number of gallons per day, average, was 778,610, a difference in favor of this year of 215,639 gallons. This is accounted for by the frequent rains during the month, making the use of hose unnecessary.

The Malden Mirror, in speaking of the closing exercises of the Belmont school of that city, says: "In Miss Lizzie P. Lunt's room the devotional exercise came first, followed by class readings, phonetic spelling, memory gems and songs by the school. The eighth class showed much proficiency in numbers. A recitation was given by Miss Maude Backus, and a Swedish song was sung by Amy, Blanche and Oscar Bloomerth. "Charlie's Opinion" was recited by Clarence Hill, and the children put into words the meaning of pictures on cards. The teacher's desk was covered with flowers, the gifts of the children, and she received also several tokens of remembrance which were less perishable. Supt. Lambert and committeemen Howe and Turner were present, and spoke words of encouragement to the children, and wished them a merry time during their summer vacation." Miss Lunt formerly resided here, and is a graduate of the Salem Normal School.

Brown & Stanley's shop will be closed to-morrow and Thursday.

Six tramps found a nights lodging in the police station last month.

THE PRICES WE NAME

— ON —

THE REMAINDER OF OUR STOCK.

We have just taken stock and find that we have in many cases certain lines of suits, pantaloons, etc., which are not complete in sizes, and have concluded to sell them at cost, and in some cases below cost, in order to close them.

HERE THEY ARE:

95 Men's All Wool Suits, latest styles and nicely made and trimmed, price $5.00; former price $12.00.

67 Men's All Wool Georgia River Mills Suits, made and trimmed as good as any custom suit, price only $6.00; former price, $15.00.

N. B.—A certain competitor being somewhat worried over our great success this spring advertises the above suit for a trifle less. If any person can buy this suit outside of our store for the price we name, we will give to that person one of our Genuine Georgia River Mills Suits free of cost provided it is not one of our own suits.

65 Men's Fine Scotch Suits, cut and trimmed in the best manner $6.00; former price $12.00.

200 Men's Blue Suits; every suit warranted fast color and a full Indigo Dye; in fact, the suit is a regular Bonanza; price $6.00; former price $10.00. Small sizes.

250 Men's Blue Yacht Suits, cut double and single breasted Sacks, made and trimmed in the best possible manner and warranted fast colors, price $10.00; former price, $13.00, and were considered a bargain at that by our customers.

Poet's Corner.

Little Feet.

Two little feet so small that both may nestle
In one caressing hand.
Two little feet upon the untried border
Of life's mysterious land.

Dimpled and soft and pink as peach-tree blossoms
In April's fragrant days,
How can they walk among the briery tangles
Edging the world's rough ways?

These white-rose feet along the doubtful future
Must bear a woman's load;
Alas! since woman has the heaviest burden
And walks the hardest road.

Love for a while will make the path before them
All dainty, smooth and fair—
Will cull away the brambles, letting only
The roses blossom there.

But when the mother's watchful eyes are shrouded
Away from the sight of men,
And these dear feet are left without her guiding,
Who shall direct them then?

Will they go stumbling blindly in the darkness
Of sorrow's tearful shades,
Or find the upland slope of peace and beauty
Whose sunlight never fades?

Will they go toiling up ambition's summit,
The common world above,
Or in some vale, securely sheltered,
Walk side by side with love?

Some feet there be which walk life's track unwounded,
Which find but pleasant ways;
Some hearts there be to which this life is only
A round of happy days;

But they are few. Far more there are who wander
Without a hope or friend;
Who find their journey full of pains and losses,
And long to reach the end.

How shall it be with her, the tender stranger,
Fair-faced and gentle-eyed,
Before whose unstained feet the world's rude high-way
Stretches so strange and wide?

Ah! who may read the future? For our darling
We crave all blessings sweet,
And pray that he who feeds the crying ravens
Will guide the baby's feet.

Florence Percy.

Is It Possible?

Ten weary, foot-sore travellers,
All in a woful plight,
Sought shelter at a wayside inn
One dark and stormy night.

"Nine rooms, no more," the landlord said,
"Have I to offer you;
To each of eight a single room,
But the ninth must serve for two."

A din arose. The troubled host
Could only scratch his head;
For of these tired men no two
Would occupy one bed.

The puzzled host was soon at ease—
He was a clever man—
And to please all his guests devised
This most ingenious plan:

A	B	C	D	E	F	G	H	I

In room marked A two men he placed;
The third he lodged in B;
The fourth to C was then assigned;
The fifth retired to D;

In E the sixth he tucked away,
In F the seventh man;
The eighth and ninth in G and H,'
And then to A he ran,

Wherein the host, as I have said,
Had laid two travellers by.
Then taking one—the tenth and last—
He lodged him safe in I.

Nine single rooms—a room for each—
Were made to serve for ten,
And this it is that puzzles me
And many wiser men.

Gath Brittle, in Harper's Young People.

Selected Story.

The Old, Old Story.

It was the old, old story, which, whether told on the land or on the sea, breathed in palace or in hut, lacks no sweetness, feels no want.

The sun was sinking slowly down the glowing west, and its warm, slanting beams fell full upon the face and figure of the young girl as she stood listening to the words of love, and looking trustingly up into the face of the man who had put the question—a face handsome enough to have proved dangerous to many a woman's heart. The sunshine tinged with gold the dark, rippling masses of chestnut hair that fell unconfined about her sloping shoulders. Her deep violet eyes were fringed with long dark lashes, that swept far down on the rose-tinted cheek. Her sweet, crimson mouth, when parted in a smile, fully disclosed the small, even teeth of exquisite whiteness. Her figure was perfect, and every movement instinct with grace.

Effie Stone was faultlessly, peerlessly beautiful, with a beauty which might bring a world to her feet; but she knew nor dreamed of no world beyond that which William Maynard's love might bound.

'Ah, I love you!' she answered him.

No one could have heard the simple words, and doubted that they sprung from her very soul, as the incense which permeates the church emanates from the sacred vessel swinging before the altar.

'Give me your hands,' said the man; and when the little rose-tipped fingers had been obediently placed within his own he continued—'Say that you will be mine, that you will let no obstacle come between us!'

She sadly shook her head.

'Papa will never give his consent, William. I am sure of it. And I am so young. How could I marry you, if he forbade it? If you will wait until I am of age, I will be your wife then.'

'You are right. You could not marry me without your father's consent. And now that I have so little to offer you; but I will go to a new place, where opportunities are not wanting, and none shall escape me. In two years, Effie, I will come back a rich man. Then your father will recognize me as a suitor for your hand. You will be patient, my love until then? But promise me, Effie—whatever betide—promise me to be true.'

'Oh, William, you cannot mean to go away? Remain here in the village. Not even my father can have the right to make me miserable always—and, oh, my love, my love! I should be miserable without you.'

'No, Effie, it must be as I say; only promise me to be true.'

The evening breeze was commencing to sway the spreading branches overhead, and the leaves whispered sadly to each other in the fading sunlight, even as they heard the girl's whispered answer, spoken 'mid her sobs.

'I will be true, William. I will remain at home, and pray for your safe return and the realization of all our hopes!'

These words were lost in kisses, and then Effie stood alone.

* * * *

Six months passed. No letters came to her from William Maynard. She knew not of his whereabouts, but waited patiently for his return.

* * * *

Two years went by, bringing many changes in the village; but they brought no tidings of her recreant lover. The girl had become a woman. She could not guess why he had never returned to her. Perhaps some fairer woman had enslaved him, perhaps he had never loved her at all, and she experienced a pang of mortified pride when she reflected that she had possibly been vain enough to make the mistake. Year by year she watched the tender green of the chestnut thicken into dark masses of leaves; year by year she watched them fading and falling, like her own hopes and illusions—When she walked at twi-light beneath the old tree its leaves seemed to whisper, "Just here he kissed you first," and "Here you said good-by." Ah, she loved the old chestnut.

Another year passed. She was forced to believe that he would never come back to her. She would try to forget him. She felt that he was dead.

Then Henry Post came upon the scene. It was an accident which brought him to Dresden. His home was in the great metropolis, but there had been some recent discoveries of a peculiar ore in the little town, and he had come more fully to investigate it, in behalf of a powerful company of which he was one of the stockholders.

He was a young man, but possessed by inheritance of immense wealth. Naturally he found Dresden dull, or would have done so but that he found Effie Stone to brighten it.

His stay lengthened itself into the summer. The ore discoveries proved very fallacious; but instead of finding, he had lost, and that no less an article than his heart. The attentions bestowed by the young man upon Effie were looked upon favorably by Mr. Stone. It was his desire that the young people should wed; and when Henry asked him for his daughter's hand in marriage, he gladly gave his consent. When the keen November breeze rustled the leaves in the old chestnut, Henry Post carried off his wife.

Night on the Atlantic—a night of brooding mystery—dense, starless, all-pervading. Up and down the deck of the Medora two figures paced. One, that of a man, young, handsome, energetic in movement; the other, a woman, small of stature and graceful of carriage.

They were silent, these two, as they walked the length of the ship and back again. All day had turbulence ruffled the breast of the mighty Atlantic. All day had dark clouds gone scudding gloomily over the sky. All day had the wind's weird voices been muttering aloft in the rigging. But now a strange stillness brooded over the sea.

'This quiet is ominous,' the young man said, gravely, to his companion; 'the storm will be upon us soon.'

A man at the companion-way paused as the sound of Henry Post's voice, for it was his, and the low, musical answer that followed it, fell on his ear. Then he moved quietly across the deck till he stood but a few feet behind the speakers, the dense darkness screening him completely.

He dropped his lighted cigar into the black flood below, and then, turning in the direction of the two persons promenading up and down the deck, he gazed long and earnestly into the face of the young woman. A gleam of recognition swept across his features, and he muttered, hoarsely:

'Tis she, and as happy as she is false.'

He walked near the railing of the steamer. He stood with clasped and dreamy eyes, and looked far away to where the black seas kissed the blacker sky. Then his face became convulsed with agony.

'God help me!' he cried, 'for love is not dead—I cannot slay it! And yet she is the wife of another! Oh, that I had not seen her to-night! I might have learned forgetfulness.'

William Maynard stood for some time gazing out over the troubled waters. When he turned again in Effie's direction, she had gone.

The storm which Post had predicted, came that night with a violence that threatened to wreck the ship. For twelve hours she rolled like a log in the trough of the sea, and when at last the wind abated and the waves went down they left her strained and battered. After the storm the vessel had run into a fog, and her course had to be run by dead reckoning.

Three days after the blow, when Maynard came on deck at night for a little exercise before turning in, he found the ship enwrapped by thick fog, through which the hoarse notes of the whistle, seeming to emphasize the danger of their position, sounded at momentary intervals. An atmosphere of its own—dull, yellow and impenetrable—enveloped the little world in which they were moving. Maynard was not lacking in courage, but he felt an involuntary sense of fright. Suddenly there came to his ear out of the darkness off the port bow, the roar of the sea breaking upon the rocks. At the same moment the voice of the look-out called wildly through the night: 'Breakers ahead! Breakers ahead!'

It was not in time, however, to save the ship. The engines were slowed, but the danger was too near and her momentum carried her on to destruction. A crash as she drove headlong upon the rocks shook her from masthead to keel.—She quivered and stood still, though it seemed that any moment she might slip off the rocks and go down. Meanwhile, Maynard had hurried down the companion-way to the Posts' rooms. Before he reached them he met Henry Post, in a state of frantic terror and half-dressed.

'Is your wife up?'

Henry Post shook his head.

'I don't know,' he cried. 'Is the vessel sinking?'

'Yes, or will be shortly,' and he rushed to Effie's room. She had just come out of the door. Her hair hung loosely upon her shoulders and her feet were bare, while over her night-dress she had drawn her thick cloak.

'William!' she cried. 'You?'

He looked in the distressed face.

'Yes, it is I, William Maynard,' he answered quietly. 'But we must think only of the present. The ship has struck a rock. You must be brave. Go in and put on something more. It is very cold on deck, and I will wait. There is no time to lose.'

She went in obediently and came out more completely clad.

'Your husband has gone on ahead' he said.

He felt a little tremor in the arm which rested upon his.

The air, the woman and the place wrought a sudden mood in him, a mood both daring and unpractical. He stopped for an instant, when every moment was precious, and drew her to himself.

'I still love you!' he cried passionately. 'I still love you! If we must be lost, it will be a consolation for me to go down with you. Though you are false, I love you!'

'False!'—the word smote her ear cruelly. Had she not waited three years for his return? Had she not always cared for him? There had been weeks and months when she had tried with all her soul to forget him for the sake of her husband—to cease to love him; and yet sometimes, while alone, she would fancy herself at home again under the old chestnut with Maynard, still young with hope in her heart.

And now her old love returned, but she tried to put it from her existence.

'Why did you not write to me, William? Not hearing from you led me to think you had forgotten me.'

'You did not receive my letters? There has been a great wrong done. I was informed that you were to marry another—that you had been fooling me; and when my letters to you were returned unopened, I believed that it was so. I—'

His voice sank. He saw it all now. He staggered back against the wall of the room and covered his face with his hands.

At last he controlled his grief and hurried forward, leading Effie up the steep companion-way to the sea-washed deck.

The passengers and crew had taken part heroically in the effort to save the ship. What mortal man could accomplish had been done. The boats were being lowered, for the vessel was slowly slipping off the rocks.

Suddenly there was a shivering shock. A great wave had shattered the ship. The timbers parted, and the freight of human souls was emptied into the sea—the cruel, boiling sea.

Effie Stone went down, becoming almost insensible, but still held in the clasp of William Maynard's faithful arms.

William seemed to be endowed with superhuman strength. He battled with the waves, and as a floating spar swept by him he caught it and grasped it tightly, Effie still in his arms.

Suddenly a voice sounded through the darkness. It came from a short distance on their left.

'Help! help!' it cried, 'I am drowning!'

'Oh, save him!' gasped Effie, 'it is he, my husband.'

Maynard closed his teeth tightly.

'No,' he answered her, 'I dare not leave you. You could not hold on to the spar alone.'

'You must save him! If you have ever loved me, don't stop to think of your wrongs now. You are strong. Oh, save my husband! Think not of my danger. Quick! Quick! Every minute that we lose is precious. For my sake, Will! For the sake of the old days!'

He left her, and after he was beaten and tossed and overcome by the waves for an age, as it seemed to her, he returned with the inanimate form of Henry Post clasped close in his arms.

A vessel rides in the tumultuous track where the crowded surges of a southern storm are crashing among themselves as the mid-sea tempest drives northward on its way. Sometimes now, as a long wave runs down to lift the keel with a different motion from that of the swollen swell on which she rides, those that lean over the side see in the depth of the hollows, fragments of a wreck floating by. Now a ship's figure-head upon which the word Medora is spelled out in the waves as if with letters of fire goes by and drives downward between the sea-ridges. For many minutes nothing follows; and now a spar slides down the side of the advancing crest. Three forms are lashed to it with stout bands. One, that of a half-drowned woman; the others, those of two men.

The vessel sits so low in the water that the boat-hooks in the hands of two men in the davits grapple the spar and hold it a moment.

'Lend a hand, James,' one of those above them says to others. 'Heze, Peter! Peter!'

And with the help that came at this command the bulk lifted slowly up the dark side, plunged back again into the surge with the stout bands severed, and the woman and the two men lay upon the deck.

It was not a moment before these waifs of wreck were within the cabin, underneath its guarded lamp, and plied with such restoratives as were at hand. But for one of them the rough effort was presently in vain. A half-breathed sentence, a lifted hand, and Henry Post still gazed up at the brows knit above him, but his countenance was only a mask of clay.

In one of the most beautiful apartments in New York, in a small, inner room, furnished with every article of luxury, seated in conversation with a gentleman, was a young and marvelously beautiful woman.

The date was one year later than that upon which occurred the wreck of the Medora, and four years later than that upon which William Maynard had bid Effie Stone good-by, under the old chestnut.

'The man you once loved,' the gentleman was saying, 'you have ceased to love him?'

Effie Post made no answer, but her head bowed lower.

'You cannot know the emptiness of my life without you. Your father has confessed that he detained my letters. Can you not try and learn again to love me?'

'Will, Will, how could you doubt me? I love you!'

'Heaven has indeed been kind to us, my love,' he said later. 'Fortune has smiled upon me, and I am looked upon as wealthy by mankind. But in life's real riches I have been poor—until to-night. Effie, you have loved me always?'

And through the lace curtains before the windows the evening wind swept the whispered answer:

'Always.'

And into two human souls crept perfect peace.

ARE THE LOUISIANA LOTTERY DRAWINGS FAIR?—The two commissioners who superintend their single-number drawings, when interviewed on the subject, reluctantly admitted that the numbers which were placed in the tubes and put in the wheel were only counted twice a year. They draw the lottery every month. Is not this a bare-faced fraud? Their excuse is that it would take ten days' labor, with four assistants. How, then, can any ticket-buyer in this lottery know that the number on his ticket has a corresponding number in the wheel? If they desire an honest drawing, why do they not, on the day of and just before their drawings, allow the ticket-holder the privilege of calling out his number and see that it is placed in the wheel, so he then can have some chance of its being drawn out with a prize from the other wheel? Other lotteries have done so. Under their system, why don't they make their capital $1,000,000? They might as well. Is not the published list of winners in their lottery also a fraud? It is very easy for a few dollars to get persons who are willing to let them use their names as the holders of a big prize. Is it any longer a wonder how they controlled the Louisiana constitutional convention, courts and Legislatures and a former post office administration? Under this system of drawings it will be no trouble to make money enough to control and run our very government.—From the Philadelphia Record, June 9, 1883.

The Eastern Railroad, besides making many desirable improvements in its principal offices and the ticket office at the station in Boston, is enlarging and greatly improving several of its platforms, with a view of securing additional accommodations for its increasing passenger traffic. A new and commodious ticket office has been built at the Boston station.

Public Etiquette.

Etiquette, or politeness of manner, does not find its exclusive sphere in the social circle. Observance of the proprieties is due on all occasions. Good breeding will manifest itself wherever it exists. The great "Unabridged" tells us that by the term etiquette is meant "properly a little piece of paper or a mark or title affixed to a bag or bundle expressing its contents." How naturally does this idea of a label or ticket pass over to one's speech and action, so that we look upon the latter as "tags" which mark the true inwardness.

It is barely possible that, in the light of this suggestion, some who lay the flattering unction to their souls of their infallible elegance of manners, may see themselves on certain occasions as grievously at fault, as really wanting in those very niceties on which they pride themselves; for it surely must be as great a blemish to disregard the rules of etiquette in one place as in another. A nature truly cultured will perceive the fitness of things, and in its speech and action express itself in harmony therewith.

But if this be so, it would seem essential for some to "brush up," as the student would say, for they must have allowed their knowledge of these matters to grow somewhat rusty. We would not intimate that a want of politeness on some occasions, is due to anything more than a slip of the memory, carelessness, or absorption for the time being in some side issue; while on the other hand, from the nature of some, we expect the code of etiquette to be ignored by them, everywhere. The coarseness of their fibre is a fertile soil for their ill-bred manners. They remind you of a patch of Canada thistles. They are like porcupines, fairly bristling with ugly looks, bad manners, and rough speech. Traveling at one time in a crowded car the writer chanced to request a representative of this class to turn over the seat before him. As matters then stood, a fellow traveler and myself were deprived of the pleasure of sitting together, whereas, by reversing the seat we both would have been provided for, and the other party would have been made fully as comfortable. My polite request met with a surly refusal. The old fellow would not budge a whiff. As my friend and I sought seats in a more congenial quarter of the car, one who had been a witness of the little affair quietly remarked, with a disgusted look directed towards the disobliging pilgrim, "that is a specimen of the genus hog." Really, as I took another look at this specimen thus analyzed and clasified, I could not but agree with the decision of the observing naturalist. There did seem to be a strong resemblance between the man and the grunting beast he so patly represented. Imagination quickened by these suggestions completed the work of transformation without the assistance of Circe's magic wand. There sat—shall I say it?—a swine in human outlines. What bit of stupidity on the part of the Railroad officials allowed this piece of live-freight to take passage in a passenger car? This little incident sufficiently illustrates what was said about the nature of some. You do not expect anything better from persons of this stripe. Polite speech and correct manners seem to be regarded by such as indicative of a soft head or sentimental heart. I have heard of an Elder of two generations past who used to declare with hearty gusto, "I come from Brush College, and if I find any culture anywhere, I'll tear it off." He would not be very apt to find any of this commodity about his own personality, nor for that matter about any one who like himself took his degree from the "bush."

It is not to such that any of the suggestions of this article are offered. It is useless to "cast pearls before swine." Hoodlums and roughs, selfish, uncultured, thoughtless and inconsiderate people will probably be none the wiser for what is here written. The heading of this article will be sufficient for such if their eyes chance to fall on it. Their make up will not permit them to take on "polish." But in the name of politeness, let us protest against the unblushing displays of want of etiquette that are often made in public places by those who know better than their manner at such times would seem to indicate. If we were to apply the test rigidly and by these "tags" of action read the character and standing of those who display them, we should be obliged to write them down as sadly deficient in a proper appreciation of the fitness of things, as wanting in agreeableness of spirit and pleasing ways. But, as has already been intimated, such a seeming want is not always due to nature and training, but rather to the thoughtlessness, the careless, light-hearted indifference of those who must know, if they will but take time to consider, that they are violating the canons of true etiquette. For example, who has not been bored to the point of exasperation by the impolite thoughtlessness of some one in his immediate vicinity at the lecture, the concert, or at other public places? You purchased your ticket and quietly wended your way to the Hall promising yourself an evening of pure profit and pleasure. You came home with Robbie Burn's familiar lines, rather than the eloquent periods of the lecturer, running through your mind:—

"The best laid schemes o' mice and men, Gang aft a-gley."

We understand the reason of your disappointment. We can divine the cause. It was not the subject of the lecture, or the style of the orator and his treatment of the theme that has brought the cloud to your brow. It was the tete-a-tete which two buzzing young ladies just in front of you, or just behind you, or right by your side, kept up the whole evening. You fidgeted about, you put up your hand to your ear to catch every word, you finally bestowed a most serious look upon the chattering maidens, your look of reproof gradually changed into a scowl. But in vain, the thoughtless ones would take no hint. You were obliged to catch what of the lecture you could through their continued fusillade of whispers and giggles. Undoubtedly those very young ladies would have been horrified to see one drink from a saucer or eat with a knife. Undoubtedly they would punctiliously observe all those little modes of speech and action, which in the home or in society, are marks of good taste and good training. Undoubtedly they made their appearance at the lecture properly decked out in fitting styles and colors. What perversity of spirit, then, led them in this public place to so put themselves out of harmony with the proprieties of the occasion? Who has not had his pleasure at the concert sadly marred by just such an exhibition of careless indifference? Two lovers, perhaps, so devoted to each other as to have little concern for those who are outside of their "mutual admiration society," may prove exceedingly annoying to one who has attended the musical exhibition for the purpose of studying a different kind of symphony. One feels like quoting Burns again, commending to these animated whispering, giggling, twisting disturbers of the peace his suggestive lines:

"Oh wad some power the giftie gie us
To see oursels as others see us!"

But the speaker, or the musician has rights which every one in the audience is bound by all the laws of etiquette to respect. Hardly a lecture or entertainment is given at which the violation of some of these laws is not witnessed. Not to mention the constant annoyances like the above which the public speaker is afflicted with, what a bad way the audience has got into of late years in preparing to leave the hall before the lecture has been brought to a close. Strange, that to be ready for the stampede ere the closing words are hardly spoken, people will loose the peroration of the lecture and insult the speaker besides, by the adjustment of rubbers, coats, shawls and other noisy inattentions. Usually the last two or three minutes of an entertainment are turned into "confusion worse confounded." The selfish desire to secure a seat in the horse car, coach, or train will account for the undue haste of some. Heaven alone knows what the unseemly hurry of others does mean, unless it be to follow the absurd fashion which must have been set by some brainless pate—"Let's be genteel or die."

I have not ventured to speak of the ill breeding and contempt of sacred themes and places that sometimes manifest themselves in the gatherings for public worship, although every "country pastor," and for that matter every city pastor likewise, could furnish out of the store house of memory sufficient instances to point the fact,—the fact showing a want, not only in politeness, but also in a higher virtue. A preacher once greatly annoyed by one who was disturbing the meeting, took it upon himself to administer a severe rebuke to the offender. Judge of his mortification on learning at the close of the service, that he had been vainly endeavoring to correct a foolish lad. He used the experience, however, to a good purpose. On another occasion finding a number giving themselves to whispering and levity, he related his attempt to improve the half witted person, adding: "I have been very careful since not to correct those whom I see disturbing the meeting, for fear that I should make the same mistake." It is hardly necessary to add that the rules governing public propriety were strictly observed during the remainder of that meeting. Would that all such violations of the common rules of politeness might be as fittingly rebuked.

But in other public places the rules of etiquette are to be regarded. Fellow townsmen are not always sufficiently mindful of the principles which should govern speech and action in their deliberative assemblies. Too often a town meeting becomes the exhibition of personal hostilities, disclosing the contemptible littleness of some souls. One can sit and endure the jack-in-the-box, who pops up to air himself on every question; the would-be orator, who astonishes the "unwashed" by his oracular declarations and unctuous arts; and even "Bombastes Furioso," as he essays to tear a passion in tatters; but who can listen to the sly insinuations or direct charges sometimes indulged in at our town meetings without a feeling of pain. How few at such times, who would be sharp at the expense of others, take into consideration the truth so happily expressed in the couplet by Young,

"As in smooth oil the razor best is whet,
So wit is by politeness keenest set."

Our great national Congress may set the example, but such ungentlemanly customs are "more honored in the breach than in the observance."

Politeness has been termed "Benevolence in little things." It is an admirable definition, for kindness lies at the basis of all true politeness. Etiquette, or the observance of polite manners, is thus prompted by the desire to please. Viewed in this light, a polite person is not the slave to mere forms and ceremonies. These become simply the servants to do the bidding of him their master. It is the kindly spirit dwelling within, which gives the right accent to the tones of the voice, and suggests the proper action and manners. Let one be swayed by this spirit and he will endeavor, on all occasions, to please others by anticipating their wishes, and by studiously avoiding whatever might give them pain. He will not selfishly monopolize the only spare seat there is with his luggage, gazing with a far off look out of the window while you search in vain for a sitting. You will find him gallant and obliging, wherever he may be, always ready to do you a service.

One of our great dailies alluded with words of commendation to a little incident which took place the past season at the corner of Washington and Winter streets, Boston. Two misses, tinely dressed, came up the street arm in arm, chatting pleasantly together — mere "butterflies of fashion" some old growler might say. But one of these merry-hearted girls perceiving an old woman, who was crossing in the slush, to be in danger from passing teams, hastened forward to the middle of the street, took the arm of the aged lady, and piloted her safely to the sidewalk. The girls then went tripping on their way, light hearted and happy, as though nothing unusual had happened. It was a little act, but an act of such a nature that the kindly spirit dwelling within shone through it. It was an act of politeness carrying out in a thoughtful, happy manner, the benificent purpose prompting the deed. If all would remember that the forms of etiquette—the polite speech, the cultured manners, the thoughtful effort to please others by doing what they wish and avoiding that which gives them pain—that all this is not the mere conventional decorum prescribed by a hollow hearted elite, but rather the outward garb in which a truly benevolent spirit seeks to array itself, what a marked improvement might be looked for in the bearing and manners of many in public places.

Wherever the common rules of etiquette are violated, there is a display of a sad want in knowledge of what is fit, and of indifference to the feelings and comfort of others. A true lady and gentleman will be careful of the proprieties in every sphere—whetner it be the domestic, social or public.

COUNTRY PASTOR.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

Butler insists that tanning human skins is "an industry" in Massachusetts; a business carried on for profit, and not for "fun" or "deviltry" on the part of a few young medical students! Butler loves to make the State odious in the eyes of the world, and his humble followers fling up their hats and applaud as though something commendable had been done. If Butler should attack the honor of the mothers of some of these deluded individuals the latter would applaud just the same. They delight—as Butler does—in filth, and revel in anything that a lying tongue can make to appear nasty.—Cambridge Press.

If you feel "all run down" and overcome with the heat, try a bottle of Morse's Yellow Dock. It is the best summer tonic and blood purifier ever offered to the public.

AT THE SEASIDE.

The maiden doffed her shoes and hose,
and then, in girlish glee,
She drew her skirts around her and she waded in the sea.
Among the wavelets waded she, for half an hour or more,
Then, growing weary with the play, she tripped again to shore;
But who shall tell the misery that filled her heart that day?
The cruel tide had flowed and washed her shoes and hose away!
O maidens at Nantasket, at Swampscott,
or at Lynn,
Beware of going wading "when the flowing tide comes in."

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

ONE OF THE most difficult things to counteract, in the administration of Gen. Butler, is his perversion of language to suit his own ends. And all the more so, because it is so shrewdly done that the mass of his followers will not see it, and could not if they would. Take, for instance, the refusal of the Governor to prorogue the Legislature to the time which both houses had agreed upon. In his message giving the reasons for such a refusal he says: "The governor, if he shall act at all, must act under the fifth article of said section, which provides that he shall have power and authority during the session of the General Court to adjourn or prorogue the same at any time the two houses shall desire, . . . if the welfare of the Commonwealth shall require the same." And he goes into a lengthy argument to show why, in his opinion, the welfare of the Commonwealth does not require that they should be so prorogued. Now we beg our readers to note carefully this fifth article to which reference is made. We give it just as it has been printed in the Public Statutes from the beginning:

"The governor, with advice of council, shall have full power and authority, during the session of the General Court to adjourn or prorogue the same to any time the two houses shall desire; [and to dissolve the same on the day next preceding the last Wednesday in May; and, in the recess of the said court, to prorogue the same from time to time, not exceeding ninety days in any one recess;] and to call it together sooner than the time to which it may be adjourned of prorogued, if the welfare of the Commonwealth shall require the same; and in case of any infectious distemper prevailing in the place where the said court is next at any time to convene, or any other cause happening, whereby danger may arise to the health or lives of the members from their attendance, he may direct the session to be held at some other, the most convenient place within the State."

Our point is this: the clause, "if the welfare of the Commonwealth shall require," has no reference to the authority of the Governor to prorogue the Legislature; it refers only to the calling together of the Legislature again, "if the welfare of the Commonwealth shall require the same." The punctuation of the article brings it beyond the matter of the opinion of any one. It is not the matter of an opinion. There is no room for a doubt on the subject. This clause does not refer to the prorogation of the Legislature. So that while the Governor has full power with the advice of the council, to prorogue the Legislature "to any time the two houses shall desire;" he has not consulted the council, but has declined to do so, giving as a reason a supposition that he has the right to decide whether or not the welfare of the Commonwealth requires it. There is no such right given him by the Constitution.

Now, while this is clearly evident to any one who will intelligently follow the wording of the Constitution, we regret to say that it will be almost impossible to convince the majority of the adherents of Butler that he is not in the right. Herein is the danger. We believe Gen. Butler knows as well as any one, the false connection to which he has referred the clause "if the welfare of the Commonwealth shall require." But he also knows that the large number of his adherents are not intelligent enough to know either the difference or distinction, and with such persons argument on a question like this is useless. It also shows from whom he expects his support. The intelligent, thinking men of all parties cannot follow him with his garbling of the Constitution, with his mixture of finances in reference to the revenue balance in the treasury. But he makes a point with those who are ignorant of the real state of affairs, and who if he should declare black to be white, would hold up their hands in assent.

This is not a pleasant state of affairs to contemplate But it is a truth that cannot be gainsaid, that nearly all the ignorant and uneducated voters of the Commonwealth are followers of Gen. Butler. They take everything he utters for the truth, and the whole truth. No matter if he mis-quotes the Constitution, no matter if he assumes power which was never given to any Governor, it is all the same to them. And while he knows this, he is certainly a dangerous man to hold the helm of State. These blunders and mis-quotations cannot be pressed home too closely to the intelligent people of the State, for we believe they cannot consistently or rationally follow Gen. Butler under these circumstances, whether they are republicans, democrats, or whatever party they are members of.

PROBABLY NO speech given to the public has attracted more attention, or been more widely commented upon, than that of Charles Francis Adams, Jr., before the Phi Beta Kappa Society of Harvard College, on Commencement Day. He took strong grounds against Greek and Latin in the college course, and in favor of the substitution of the modern languages in their stead. To some extent these views touch a popular chord. The study of the classics has been a bone of contention, always, among educators. And the abolition of everything that cannot be applied practically in after life is a subject upon which some people never weary of discoursing.

It is to be questioned if one quarter of the studies pursued in a collegiate course are of practical value to the student. But it does not therefore follow that they should be taken from the curriculum. Is there one in a hundred studying the higher mathematics with an opportunity or inclination to apply them practically? And they are as inclined to get "rusty" in them as in Latin and Greek after a few years. Why not, on the same principle, war against mathematics beyond the practical rules? It will be said that the study of the higher mathematics fits the student for the better comprehension of what is practical in the lower branches. So it can truly be said of the study of the classics. The tendency is to better understand the principles of our own language.

But when these studies are carried on to the exclusion of the more practical branches, or where the young student is required to take up Latin when he is unable to read or write the English language correctly, there is room for much criticism and reformation in the method of study. And of late considerable prominence has been given to this point. Practically, a young man or woman who is able to write a letter in good English, or converse fluently and correctly, counts for more in the average opinion of the community than one who can name for you all the battles of the world or bound all the countries of Europe, but who could not write ten sentences in English without incorrect spelling and worse grammar. We insist that more attention should be given to the study of the English language in our lower schools; that those boys and girls whose school days are ended with the grammar department should be able to write better and speak better than they can to-day.

THE SUPPORT which Gen. Butler received in the campaign of last fall—the support upon which he relies again, is from the Republican party. Those men who were drawn to Butler by personal magnetism, by a desire of change and by disaffection because of some fancied slight, were the voters who elected our present Executive. It is evident that Butler knows this better than any one else. Look at the appointments made by him in his official capacity. Are they of the party to whom is generally given the credit of electing him? By no means. They are, in the main, disaffected Republicans—Butler men, so called—men whose influence is not so much with the democratic party as with their old associates, who are expected to gather in the independent vote. Occasionally a sop is thrown to the democrats, to keep them quiet, but they have been, thus far, greatly in the minority.

The opposition to Butler, also, is not confined to the Republican party. Butlerism is not democracy or labor reform. He is thankful for the support of these parties, but it is the independent vote from the Republican party which he is after, to turn the scales. He knows, as does every fair minded man, that Massachusetts is a Republican State to the backbone. In any other than a Butler campaign the personal following of Gen. Butler would gravitate to the different parties. But it is useless to deny that no man in the State has so large a following—from no party, no class or condition. Equally wide is the opposition, and in the coming campaign it will be the duty and mission of the leaders of the Republicans to unite this opposition. No man of strict party views can do this. The voters, who prefer Butler to a candidate who may not be the choice of the majority of the party, must be called upon to support one whose character and political reputation is beyond the onslaught of Butler. Such a man can be found. Not, perhaps, among the old party hacks. Such a candidate must not be nominated before the convention, but must be the choice of the convention. More and more is it becoming apparent that the Republicans are disposed to bury the personal aspirations of this or that man, and unite upon a strong candidate. They are disposed to welcome to their ranks any opponent of Butler, and march with united front this fall. In such a campaign we shall deserve to win.

THE past week has been a difficult one for the Managers of the Lynn horse railroad. The travel on the Fourth and succeeding days exceeded all expectation. President Breed has done all in his power to accommodate the patrons, and it must be borne in mind that the directors of the road, while consenting to the extension, were by no means so enthusiastic in its favor, or so sanguine of its success, as was Mr. Breed. There were many of our own citizens, also, who, while personally desirous of seeing the road completed, admitted to Mr. Breed that they doubted the expediency of putting it through, as they "didn't believe there would be anybody ride over it." The experiences of the last week, to say nothing of the travel since the line was opened, must be a decided set-back to these croakers. And in the face of this timid support, is it to be wondered at that Mr. Breed was unable to accommodate the crowds which have more than filled the cars during the last week?

THE NEW Postmaster General has re-affirmed the decisionof Postmaster General Key in regard to the Louisiana lottery, and has directed that no money orders or registered letters shall be delivered to M. A. Dauphin, either as agent for this lottery or personally. This is perfectly right. Whether the lottery is conducted fairly or not is the least question to be considered. Our judgment is that it is a fraud from beginning to end. But, at all events, the money sent in such ventures may as well be thrown away. If the department adheres to this order, many a hard earned dollar will be saved to the people all over the country, and the Postmaster General is deserving of great praise in his attempt to break up this lottery scheme, which is probably the best advertised one in the land.

Ten Thousand Dollars is the standing reward offered by the Republican State Committee for a satisfactory candidate to run against Butler this fall.—Marblehead Statesman.

Will the Statesman inform the public and it readers, especially, when and where such an offer was made? Such a statement would not be worth the notice were it not an illustration of what is being constantly stated, in the organs of the party which the Statesman represents, prejudicial to the Republican party, from week to week, and strenuously believed by their devoted readers.

The Empire State will leave Battery wharf, Boston, to-morrow, for the famous North Shore trip; Friday, Provincetown and Saturday afternoon a trip in the bay will be indulged in, at which 50 cents will pay the fare. Fishing trips are taken every Monday by this boat, and the Empire State Band accompanies her on each trip. These excursions have lost none of their popularity, and Capt. Phillips is as cordial and happy to see h is friends as ever.

One of the most honorable and genial dealers in Dry Goods in the city of Lynn is J. E. Burrows, No. 118 Union street, near the Eastern depot, and his stock of goods is worth a ride to that city to see. The newest, freshest, most desirable styles from New York and Boston are always on his counters, and with the agreeable clerks who are found at his establishment, it is a real pleasure to trade there.

Read the new advertisement of Wilmot on our first page, and see the prices which have been made on all his stock remaining to close the season. Now is the time for bargains, and the man who takes advantage of this opportunity will not regret it. Call and look over his goods, which Mr. Boynton will take pleasure in showing, whether you desire to purchase or not.

During the heated term last Friday, a man named Thomas Freeman, employed at the factory of Thomas E. Proctor, drank too freely of ice water and was shortly after a corpse. He was removed to his home on Varney street, Salem.

Two workmen employed at the town house imbibed too freely of liquor last Monday, and became engaged in a quarrel. One knocked the other down, who immediately went for an officer to arrest him, but the officer refused to do so without a warrant.

A man while working at the new town hall yesterday, received a severe blow upon the head, from a hammer, which fell from the hands of a workman in the upper part of the portico. The man was partly stunned but in a few minutes recovered.

One of the steam fire engines in this town uses the Knibbs valve, the rights of which have recently been in litigation. The adverse decision of the courts against the claimants has saved many thousands of dollars to cities and towns using fire engines.

As Mr. Myers, a gentleman residing on Aborn Place, was lighting one Roman candle from the lighted fuse of another, last Wednesday evening, both candles exploded, burning both hands nearly to the bones. Dr. Frost dressed his wounds, which will probably disable him a month.

"Is that clock right?" inquired a blushing young maiden on a Nahumkeag Street Railway car last Monday noon, as she pointed to the new ticket register in the center of the car. The conductor bit his lip and explained the machine to her, while the other passengers enjoyed the situation.

A couple of brothers-in-law who had not met for some time, came together on Foster street last night. They did not part as affectionately as they met and it required the assistance of the police to separate them—so cemented had become their friendship. This morning they paid the usual fines.

A flaw in the forward axle, of the buggy of Miss Mamie Poole, of Lynn, caused a wheel to come off on Washington street last Thursday afternoon, which nearly threw the fair occupant to the ground. The horse ran but a short distance, when it was stopped with out furthur damage to the vehicle.

Mr. Harry Hodges died at his home at Newton Highlands on the morning of the Fourth. Mr. Hodges was well known here, and had made a large number of friends, who will greatly regret his early demise. He had been suffering for a long time with a heart difficulty, which terminated in his death.

We see it announced that the Lowell Island House is open again this year for the season. We remember our visit there last summer, and we truly believe that it is a charming resort for people whose ancestors came over in the May-flower, or some other early emigrant ship. It was too frigid for our blood.

An interesting meeting of Bowditch Lodge, No. 619, Knights of Honor, was held on Monday evening, the special occasion being the official visitation of the District Deputy Grand Dictator. After the transaction of the necessary business, remarks were made by Comrades Wiley, Randall, Clerk, Littlefield and Sanger.

The tax is now off on friction matches, which means that the consumer will be able to buy them at $1.44 per gross less than the former price, or thirty-six cents less per quarter gross. Unstamped matches that have been selling for fifty-six cents per quarter gross, ought to sell for twenty cents now, and give the dealers and makers the same profit.

Trade dollars are again at a discount. Some merchants will take them for 85 cents, but others decline them at any price. Instead of getting rid of their trade dollars we advise our readers to hold on to them rather than let them go for 85 cents. They are worth eighty-eight cents in actual silver weight.—Probably the whole thing is inspired by city brokers who want to rake in the silver.

The first meeting of the Essex Club with the new president, N. A. Horton, Esq., of the Salem Gazette, in the chair, was held at Young's Hotel, Boston, last Saturday afternoon. It was voted that the August meeting of the Club be holden at the Salem Willows, leaving the time to the president and secretary to decide upon. It is hoped that the members from this vicinity will be present in large numbers on that occasion.

The selectmen have summoned Mrs. Lillis and Bartholomew Lawton to appear and show cause why their license for selling liquor should not be revoked. In the case of Mrs. Lillis it is claimed that liquor is sold in a different apartment from which the license was granted for its sale; in Lawton's case, it is claimed that he maintains a back door entrance contrary to law. Mrs. Lillis' hearing is this afternoon, Lawton's Saturday.

Mr. Edward Price has been painting the house on Central street, belonging to the estate of Franklin Osborn, Jr. Mr. Price is probably the oldest painter in town, having worked at that business for fifty years ending last March. He served an apprenticeship of five years with Jonathan W. Osborne, whom our older readers will remember as one of the most skilful house and sign painters of his time.

The Sunday school picnic of the Baptist Sunday school took place at Magnolia yesterday, leaving in Quint's barges. The weather was all that could be desired, and the drive to and from Magnolia, always very delightful, was made even more so by the recent heavy rains, which put the excellent roads in fine condition. The day was spent in games, boating, etc., which go to make up the successful picnic that it was.

Mr. Abner McKean left town last night for Nova Scotia, having received word that the house of his wife's father had been burned to the ground, and that everything was lost, the inmates just escaping with their lives. Mr. McKean's wife and three children were visiting there at the time, and all their personal effects were destroyed. Mr. McKean, of course, is considerably anxious about his family, and so hastens to their relief.

The administration of Patrick Comer of Peabody, the lad who was killed by the elephant Bolivar with Forepaugh's show at Boston, about a month ago, has brought suit against the proprietors, and Thursday, while the company were in Salem, attached the goods and effects of the show on a writ, the ad damnum of which is laid at $10,000. H. P. Moulton, Esq., is council for Comer, while Mr. Forepaugh has secured Hon. Chas. P. Thompson. A bond for the amount was given.

The reception tendered Rev. W. P. Chipman, pastor of the Baptist church, last Thursday evening, was, despite the severe shower which kept many away, a very enjoyable occasion to pastor and society. Many were the hearty handshakes and good wishes extended the pastor for success in his new field of labor, and all seemed to feel that good would be the result. The opinion was unanimous that such social occasions should be held oftener.

A little girl named Annie Brennan, daughter of Mr. Timothy Brennan, who recently had his arm broken by being kicked by a horse at A. T. Dodge's blacksmith shop, had her finger taken off, last Saturday morning, at the machine shop of Mr. T. E. Wilson. She was looking in a window near which was a lathe in operation, and placing her finger too near the machine it caught in the gearing, which took off the first finger of the right hand.

Forepaugh's Circus and Managerie has come and gone, and it seemed as if the 5th of July was but a continuation of the 4th over. At the afternoon performance of this show, the tent was filled, nearly every seat being occupied, and notwithstanding the heavy showers the evening performance was largely attended. The programme contained some new and novel features. The performing elephants, under the control of Adam Forepaugh Jr., showed remarkable training and understanding.

Read the new advertisement of C. S. Goodridge, 68 Market street, Lynn. There is no better place in the county to buy a good stylish hat, than at Goodridge's, and what is more you can buy it at a reasonably low figure, as his prices indicate. There is also a splendid assortment of gents furnishing goods to select from, the prices of which cannot be beaten.

OSBORNE, LYNN.

FINAL SALE
— OF THE —
CUSHMAN STOCK!

The Entire Balance of the Cushman Stock in all its Departments to be closed out commencing June 22d, and ending July 15th.

We think it proper to inform the public generally that our Great Sale of the Cushman Stock will close July 15th; it has been, thanks to the liberal patronage of our customers throughout Lynn and adjacent towns, without any question the greatest success ever achieved in the retail trade of this city. The sales have been entirely without precedent, and the interest and excitement unflagging; the past week being the largest since the commencement, and Saturday, June 16th, the sales reached the highest amount for five years. The next twenty days will afford the last opportunity to purchase any of these great bargains. Whatever stock may be left in any department is to be sold out before July 15th, and those who have not already purchased will find the most remarkable inducements that have ever been offered in the Boot and Shoe line.

CONTINUED SUCCESS URGES US TO GREATER EFFORTS.

From friend to friend, from neighbor to neighbor the word goes:

OSBORNE'S IS THE BEST PLACE TO TRADE.

We have started a boom in Low Prices and the Masses are made Happy.

SEE HERE!
Ladies Croquet Slippers with nice bows, once sold for 75 cents, last week we retailed them for 50 cents, now we Slaughter the balance, about 200 pairs at 35 CENTS.
If This Price is Beaten, Down They Go!
The people know we mean solid business when we announce a Slaughter.

AGAIN!
What do you think of it! A man's all solid Leather (no shoddy whatever) Strap Shoe, any size, at the ridiculously low price of 65 cts. The identical make that other parties are advertising as cheap at $1.25. Only 60 cts. difference. That ain't much on a 65 cent shoe.
We may Sell them less! Can't Tell

ONCE MORE!
We offer 300 pairs Ladies' Kid Button Boots, usually retailed for $2.00 per pair, for $1.20. They are new style, Opera, box toe, Scallop top, nobby heel. Our neighbors are utterly dismayed, and wonder how we live and sell at such prices. We will sell lower if this price is met.

HOW'S THIS.
We shall take 275 pair of the elegantly fitting Glove Top Duchess Boots, (sold in Boston and elsewhere for $2.00) and have them ready for sale on Monday morning, $1.45 will be the price to start with, and lower if this price is beaten.

SPECIAL BARGAIN.
As a Special Bargain we shall offer on Gent's fine Shoes one small lot of Satin de Laine French Patent Calf Congress, for $1.00. These are really excellent, and as we have but a few of them to offer, we advise an early inspection.

NOW LOOK.
Last week we thought we were nearly giving away Ladies' Serge Top Congress and Serge Slippers. This week we beat it all to pieces. We now Slaughter the Congress for 60 cts. The Slippers for 21 cts. And Lower if this price is beaten. Dealers are perfectly horrified at our Prices.

BEHOLD the BARGAINS.
Ladies' Serge Slippers almost given away, for 21, 45 and 80 cts.

Misses School Shoes, 85 cts., 95 cts. $1.10. Sold elsewhere for 25 cts. more per pair,

A Lot of Men's Nobby Style hand-sewed Strap Shoes, selling for $3.25, 3.50 and 3.75.

Our $4 75 Shoe we will guarantee superior to a line sold in this city for $5 50. If you do not find it so we will make you a present of a pair.

READ THIS.
We offer a small lot of Men's genuine hand-sewed Strap Shoes, at the absurd price of $1.50 per pair. Any one desirous of the most comfortable working Shoe in the world (without much regard for style) should surely examine this Shoe.

We have not space to enumerate the immense assortment of Boots and Shoes we are showing. Every grade, from the cheapest to the costliest, can be found on our shelves—marked down to sell for Less Money than the same quality can be bought for of any other concern in New England.

We intend to make a Clean Sweep in every department.

Mr. Chas. L. Osborn is a member of the Raymond excursion to Quebec, which left yesterday afternoon.

The average woman continues to get off the horse car backwards, as usual, in spite of all warnings to "face to the front." The average man continues to jump on and off the car, as usual, in spite of the injunction to "wait until the car stops." The average conductor continues to be absorbed in contemplation of his driver's back, instead of looking for passengers, as the rules require. The average driver continues to go ahead although he knows that the hurrying would-be passenger is coming, and that it is dangerous for said passenger to get on while the car is in motion.

Wellman Osborne of Lynn announces the last week of his great sale of the Cushman stock of boots and shoes, and he makes some prices which seem marvelous. Mr. Osborne is one of the largest and most enterprising shoe dealers of Lynn, and his success in disposing of the large Cushman stock is only one of a series of business triumphs.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

The trip yesterday under the auspices of Unity Degree Camp, I. O. O. F., of Salem, proved to be very pleasant and successful, except that there was a smaller number than was anticipated. The steamer Twilight left Phillips' wharf at 10.20, with about 400 on board. It is a commodious, comfortable and fine sailing boat, and the voyage by Marblehead, Lowell Island, across the bay to Minots, then skirting along Nantasket Shore, around Hull, and into Nantasket, was delightful to all but a few who suffered from mal de mer. Four hours were quickly and pleasantly spent on the beach and vicinity. The bulk of the party took dinner at the Ocean House, where excellent dinners are served. There are so many attractions at Nantasket, including the new, spacious and elegant skating rink, that only repeated visits can exhaust them. The boat left at 5.20, arriving at Salem about 7. The party comprised persons from Salem, Peabody, Danvers, Beverly and Marblehead. There were present from Peabody, Mr. B. S. Wheeler and wife, Lendall Foan and wife, William A. Saunders and wife, Chas. H. Gilman, Daniel Woodbury, Chas. S. Kimball, Arthur D. Morrison and wife, Charles D. Bliss, George Randall and wife, John Ruth, Miss Nellie Stockwell, Miss Dora B. McCausland, Misses Annie and Helen Clothey, Mrs. H. A. Besse, Mrs. J. P. Fernald, Mrs. Albert Vittum, James Buxton and wife, William Moore and daughter, Charles D. Howard, Esq., and Willie Todd Howard, of the Salem Post, B. D. Hill, correspondent of the Boston Globe, Thomas H. McGrath of the Reporter.

The annual Unitarian Grove Meeting will be held this year at Weirs, Lake Winnipiscogee, N. H., commencing on Wednesday afternoon, July 25, and continue through Sunday, July 29. The following speakers have already pledged their services: Revs. A. P. Peabody, W. P. Tilden, W. H. Savage, C. F. Dole, F. B. Hornbrooke, E. F. Hayard, J. S. Thomson, S. B. Crothers, Miss M. F. Devereux, Mrs. B. C. Barrows. The presence and assistance of other well known clergymen and laymen are expected. At the Lakeside Hotel, on the grounds, board will be furnished at 50 cents a meal or $1 a day. Board and lodging for $1.50 a day, or $8 a week. There is a restaurant connected with the hotel. At the Winnecoette House, half a mile away, board and lodging will be $2 a day, or $8 a week, and upwards. At farm houses in the vicinity, board and lodging will be from $5 a week upwards. Application may be made to Messrs. Heath & Brown, Weirs, N. H. Hotel Weirs is near the grounds. The hotels at Centre Harbor, Wolfboro' and Long Island can be reached by steamer. Excursion tickets to be good from July 25 to July 29 going, and until August 23 returning, from Salem via Lowell, $4. Communications should be addressed to Rev. John D. Wells, Secretary, Laconia, N. H.

"Ipswich! Ipswich!" was the startling cry that aroused a bewildered sleeper on a train from Boston on the Fourth of July evening. The b. s. was no other than a respectable married man belonging in this town, who, overcome either by the fatigues of the day or the comfort afforded by the Eastern Railroad passenger cars, had fallen asleep and passed through Salem, wholly unconscious that he had arrived in that "city of peace." He next consulted the conductor, who advised that he continue his trip to Newburyport and take the fast express home. But fate was against him, for shortly before reaching Newburyport the express train thundered by, and our b. s. found upon his arrival there that he must stay all night. As he realized the situation and thought of the anxiety of dear ones at home, he sought a telegraph office, but found communication with Peabody shut off. First he thought he would walk home, but later he decided that he would repair to a hotel, where the night was spent in consulting guide books and A B C Pathfinders.—However, the first train leaving Newburyport found him aboard, and seven o'clock Thursday morning found him clasped in the bosom of his anxious family, explaining his unseemly conduct.

The old Peabody house on Washington street was successfully robbed last Thursday. Entrance was gained by forcing through a rear door. The house was ransacked from top to bottom, but the would-be burglars were unsuccessful in securing much plunder. Mr. Watkins, one of the tenants, was at the rear of the house making hay at the time, but did not hear anything of the robbers. After the pads completed their search they promptly took their departure. No clew has been obtained as to whom the parties were.

Buy your Confectionery of Geo. Stevens and get it fresh.

The glorious Fourth of 1883 has passed into history. In this town it was one of the most quiet for years. The younger element began about a week before with horns, crackers, torpedoes, etc., which culminated in a grand finale on the night before, and continued up to the hour when such a racket was allowable, when all was quiet and the town slept. The bells were rung in the morning (and the belles wrung their clothes in the evening, for that matter,) and at sunset the flag was raised, and everybody left town for attractions offered in other places. Quite a number of the Grand Army picnicked at Horse-pasture point, and the base ball match at Danvers drew largely from this town, while Salem's horrible "horrible" show sold not a few. The shower in the evening interfered with a number of private displays of fireworks, and hastened people to their homes at an early hour.

A man named Oliver Martin, well known in town, was fatally injured by the Lowell freight train last Monday noon. He had been at the blacksmith shop of Jesse H. Smith, by whom he was formerly employed, and made a small hammer. After finishing it he went to Arthur T. Dodge's, and was returning to Mr. Smith's as the Lowell freight train was backing on a side track near the Lowell freight depot, and Mr. Martin, being very hard of hearing, did not hear it. The train struck him and knocked him down, cutting off the left leg and crushing his left arm in a terrible manner, besides breaking his right hip. He was conveyed to the Salem Hospital, where he died about five o'clock. Mr. Martin was the father of Mrs. Wm. Farrington, on Lowell street. His age was 75 years, 5 mos., 15 days. The remains were interred at Cedar Grove Cemetery.

On the Fourth occurred the first real thunder storm of the season. Shortly after six o'clock, vivid flashes of lightening, after which sharp claps of thunder, indicated a shower, and the wind swung around to the Northward, clearing the vitiated atmosphere, baked hot by the continuance of a very high temperature. Overhead the sky was almost cloudless, while toward the Southward a bank of black vapor hovered like a pall. Its presence was ominous, followed shortly by rain which descended in torrents, gradually increasing in ferocity and quantity until the vision was limited by the density of the fall. The gutters were soon filled and the water poured down the street, sweeping them from curb to curb. The lightning and thunder furnished one of nature's grandest displays of fireworks. The storm continued for several hours.

Letters advertised July 11:—Mr. Curley, J. M. Craughwell, Mary T. Dodge, M. T. Daley, Mrs. Mary Fisher, Mrs. Bailey Goodridge, Patrick Gregain, Mrs. L. T. Greenlaw, Jennie Hill, G. W. Johnson, Patrick Kelley, Mrs. Maggie Kellett, Dennis Kelly, James Lahey, Mrs. Ellen Linnehan, Mary Lawrence, Catharine Loury, Augus J. McInness, P. Mallon, Jere. Murphy, Mrs. Rebecca H. Merrill, Daniel Manning, Edward O'Neil, Fred Plunkett, Mrs. J. A. Peabody, John Ryan, Miss E. Small, Jos. S. Saul, Owen Sweeney, John Sullivan, Samuel Smyth, David Twist, W. H. Walker, Hervey Wilson.

District Deputy Grand Master, Wm. M. Hill and suite, installed the following elected and appointed officers of Holten Lodge I. O. O. F. last evening. After the installation a collation was served. N. G., Geo. E. Parker; V. G., Geo. H. Manning; Rec. Secy., Eben I. Kimball; Treas., Geo. F. Sanger; R. S. N. G., S. S. Littlefield; L. S. N. G., Geo. M. Foster; R. S. V. G., Dr. H. K. Foster; L. S. V. G., Charles Batchelder; Warden, John McDonald; Conductor, Dr. C. G. Weston; R. S. S., C. M. Mason; L. S. S., Fred Blake; Chap., Chas. J. Wiggin; I. G., Chas. H. Gilman; O. G., Daniel A. Goodrich.

A man named Michael Kiley, for the past thirty-five years employed by the Salem & Lowell R. R., had a narrow escape last Friday afternoon. In stepping from an engine near Dean & Blake's morocco factory his foot slipped, and the engine which was moving slowly at the time, struck him and threw him into the brook on the side of the track. He got out as quickly as possible, none the worse except a little wetting. Mr. Kiley was to leave the employ of the road that day, and during the thirty-five years which he had served the road, had never met with an accident of any kind.

Artists' Materials, Winsor & Newton's Oil and Water Colors, Canvasses, brushes, &c. Also a full line of American, sable and bristle brushes at low prices. 15 per cent. discount to parties purchasing in quantities. Smith & Robinson, 42 Market street, Lynn.—Successors to S. A. Barton.

Now that the year is half-ended, it may not be amiss to recall New-Year resolutions, and see how well they are kept; also, to consult the diary so scrupulously kept during the days of the opening year.

So. Peabody.—Mr. Warren Shaw is having his house painted, by Blaney.

The Lynn & Boston R. R. Co,, lost a valuable horse last week at the Wyoma stables.

Mrs. Ann Sanborn, mother of Mrs. David Twiss, died Tuesday morning from a shock of paralysis.

At a meeting of the S. C. Bancroft Hose Co., No. 5, Monday evening, it was voted to detail members to watch with their brother fireman, John Putnam.

A horse with a horse rake attached ran away last Wednesday on Lynnfield street, but was caught on Washington street before any damage was done.

It is doubtful if the ladies appreciated the bangs which were plenty on the Fourth.

Last Friday a young lad about ten years of age attempted to catch on a Lynn car on Lynn street. He lost his hold and fell, nearly coming under the wheels. The first intimation the passengers had of his presence was a scream when he fell.

Mrs. Henry Barker has a very choice specimen of wax hoy, or what is commonly called wax plant. It is some ten years old, and the leaves put forth still remain on the vine and retain their dark green color. But few, if any, ever drop off. Some five or six years ago a name was pricked on a leaf with a pin, and the points are distinctly visible while the leaves are just as green. This plant is quite peculiar. The leaves get their growth in a short time and then retain their size. The vine is like a large wire, branching out at different lengths of the same size, and may be formed into circles as you please. The flower is very beautiful, being star shaped, doubled; the outer star is white, and soft as velvet; on this lapped a smaller star, white, with a carmine tinted center, and this second star looks like wax. There is a drop of sweet liquid on each wax star. The plant is very fragrant, but only about dark, there being no odor noticeable through the day.

Mr. John Putnam, a partner of Mr. John Linehan, was seriously injured last Friday, while blasting rocks at Stimpson's Ledge in South Peabody.—He had drilled a hole in a large block of granite, and attaching a fuse lit the end, when it exploded immediately.—The blast struck Mr. Putnam in the right leg, crushing it in a terrible manner. He was conveyed to his home, where the leg was amputated above the knee. Mr. Putnam says the fuse was defective, thus causing it to explode prematurely. The patient is as comfortable as can be expected.

Last Wednesday morning, Mr. H. N. Batchelder's ice team started out about 2 o'clock, and left ice on the steps of the different saloons along Foster street. Returning about five hours later, he stopped at one of them to inquire if they had enough for the day, and was surprised to learn that they had not received any at all. On inquiring at the other places where he had left it, he found a similar complaint. Their wants were soon supplied but it was not until later in the day that he learned that a lot of bold, bad boys had followed along the whole route and removed the ice as soon as he had left.

A man named Bryant living in the vicinity of Lynnfield had a watch and chain stolen from his vest pocket while at work haying last Friday. It is supposed that a tramp seen in the vicinity was the purloiner.

Our new superintendent of streets, Mr. Marshall, is proving the right man in the right place. The work that he is doing will be appreciated.

The strawberry festival Tuesday evening of last week, in the vestry of the new church, was quite successful, pecuniarily considered, and proved like wise a very enjoyable occasion. The entertainment consisted of readings and recitations, together with music and singing. The young people took hold of the matter with commendable zeal and heartiness, and acquitted themselves in a very creditable manner. A delegation from the South Church was present.

Arrangements have been made between the Superintendents of the Naumkeag and Lynn & Boston Railroads, whereby the cars of either road may convey passengers at excursions or picnics over the tracks of the other road—thus avoiding the change of cars which would otherwise be necessary.—Several Lynn cars, in accordance with this arrangement, went through to the Willows last week. It is a convenience which will meet with public approval, and is a proof of the harmonious feeling existing between the roads.

The postmaster-general, finding that postmasters were careless in their treatment of their transient newspapers in the mails, issued an order directing all employes of the postoffice department to exercise as much care in handling newspaper packages as in handling letters. Every effort is to be made to get a newspaper package through to its destination. If it bears insufficient postage and the sender is known, it is to be returned to him.

TO THE PUBLIC!

We have always possessed the idea that the poor man's hard earned dollar should purchase just as much as a like amount of his wealthy neighbor.—WE BELIEVE IT. WE ACT UPON IT. Three years ago it was hard to convince customers that a firm in the FURNITURE business would or could make such a departure. WE DID, and our business to-day is a pleasing monument of its kindly reception by the people of Lynn, Swampscott, Saugus, Nahant, Marblehead, Peabody, Danvers, Lynnfield, Salem, &c., to whom we are more than thankful.

HIS OPINION.

IN CLEAR SENTENCES AN AUTHORITY ADDS HIS OWN TO THE POPULAR JUDGMENT.

191 West Tenth Street, }
New York, Aug. 11, 1880. }

MESSRS. SEABURY & JOHNSON:

I am slow to pin my faith to any new curative agent. BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER has won my good opinion. I find it an exceptionally cleanly plaster to use and rapid in its action. Many tests of its qualities in my own family, and among my patients, have convinced me that there is no other single article so valuable for popular use, none so helpful in cases of Lame Back, Local Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Congestion of the Bronchial Tubes and Lungs and Lumbago. You may feel free to use my name. Very truly yours,

H. H. KANE, M. D.,
Physician-in-Chief of the De Quincy Home.
Price of the CAPCINE 25 cents.

The Indians on the War Path.

The practice of allowing Indian chiefs to go to Washington in parties of a dozen or two, to see the "Great Father," will be discouraged in the future, at least during the administration of the present "Great Father," Mr. Arthur. He has got enough of the Great Father business to last him for four years, if he knows his own heart, and he thinks he does. An official of the Washington government, who was in Chicago last week, told a story that will illustrate the change that has come over the president, and will give the reason why so many of the friends of Mr. Arthur are going away from Washington for their health. It seems there was a delegation of Indian chiefs at the capital, and an evening was appointed for them to call at the White House. Mr. Arthur had invited Mr. Chandler, Judge Folger, Mr. Rounds, the government printer, Mr. Hatton, the assistant postmaster general, Mr. Lincoln, and several others to help him receive the chiefs, and a little after dark all arrived, the chiefs in charge of an interpreter. After there had been a general talk, and smoking the pipe of peace, Mr. Hatton, a wicked young person from Iowa, suggested that the Indians be given a little something to drink, to warm up their genial natures, and the President, who is easily misled by designing men, told the butler to open some choice wine. Judge Folger felt that it was a mistake, but he did not kick, though when, an hour later, he came through a window and landed in the White house grounds, he told the servant who picked him up and pinned his coat tails together in the back, and telescoped his hat out again, that no one but a confirmed and unanimous idiot would think of giving champagne to wild Indians. As the rich wine was being poured out in the glasses, the Indians lost the solemn look which they had retained, and Mr. Rounds, who speaks the Indian tongue, since taking a trip to Denver, years ago, took up a glass and said "How," the Indians said "How," and poured it down. It was interesting to watch the changed condition of the aborigines. Before drinking the wine they seemed to feel that they were an inferior race, trodden upon by the iron heel of the progress of civilization, and they appeared to desire nothing so much as to be let alone to go off into the forest fastness to die with plug hats on. But when the generous wine began to get in its work they appeared to own the place, and instead of the appearance of a sullen and relentless foe, they wanted to hug everybody. One glass of wine brought on another, and though all knew that the Indians were fast disappearing as a race, it was felt that the few that were left could hold their own tolerably well with their white brothers, when it came to irrigating the arid plains of their stomachs. Some of them could not get enough from the glasses, and as fast as the corks of bottles would fly from confinement, the Indians would take the bottles and drink from the mouth. The Great Father felt as though there was a certain lack of dignity in the proceedings, and he fain would have brought the festivities to a close, but the wicked Mr. Hatton said that such a thing would so fire the Indian heart, and offend his proud nature, that a war would be inevitable. He said he knew too well what an Indian war meant, as he lived at Burlington at the time of the New Ulm massacre, and as for himself he had rather shed every drop of champagne in the government vaults, than to see a single washtub full of human gore stain the carpet of the blue room. Mr. Arthur said maybe he was right, but it seemed to him, and he could not help the feeling, brought up as he was in New York, where nothing aboriginal except tobacco signs and Tammany politicians ever caused the hair to stand, that this affair was rapidly becoming so demonstrative as to lay the government open to criticism. He said he appreciated that a president must entertain guests, and oftentimes forget dignity, but when a crook-nosed Indian put a blanket around the marble bust of Mrs. Hayes, stuck a feather duster in her back hair, and yelled "Whoopla, Lydia Pinkham," the proceeding partook of the nature of a cow-boy picnic, and when he saw an Indian put a plug hat on the noble head of the bust of Hayes, and place a wassail bowl to the lips of that great apostle of crab-apple juice, he felt hurt. Just then an Indian came up and threw both arms about the neck of the president and kissed him on the cheek, while another, with a half empty bottle stuck in his belt, hugged Mr. Chandler until it was feared his corset strings would be broken. Mr. Rounds was seated on a sofa with a chief, arguing with him as to whether the congressional Record should be set up in brevier or nonpareil, and trying to show that the Indians were safe from harm as long as the government printing office had a dollar to buy them bread. Judge Folger was trying to edge out of the room, and Mr. Lincoln had just chucked a chief who wanted to kiss him for his father, under a table, when Mr. Hatton told the interpreter that the president desired, above all things, that his children should engage in a war dance, and the chiefs were so informed. The head chief began to howl and they all chimed in, and as they got excited they grabbed the distinguished hosts, and when the police came in, after Judge Folger was picked up in a rose bush under the window, it was said consternation was depicted on every countenance except those of Mr. and Mrs. Hayes. The president had got up stairs with only the loss of one coat tail and his necktie, but Mr. Chandler was sat down on by an exhausted chief and remained. Mr. Hatton, who is small, was taken under the arm of a chief and used for a pappoose, while the Rounds sat at the piano and attempted to sooth the savage breast with some of the rawest music that ever was. The police returned the Indians to their reservation at a hotel, in a patrol wagon, and the next day all was serene, except that Mr. Arthur and Mr. Hatton are not speaking now, the president feeling that all of the trouble was caused by that designing young person, who pretended to know all about Indians because he was from Iowa. No more Indian delegations will be received at the White House, except at the point of the bayonet.—Peck's Sun.

FREE OF COST.

All persons wishing to test the merits of a great remedy—one that will positively cure Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, or any affliction of the Throat and Lungs—are requested to call at Hazen A. Spaulding's Drug Store and get a trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, free of cost, which will show you what a regular dollar size bottle will do.

The New York central labor union had a lively debate last Sunday on the question of inviting Gov. Butler to act either as marshal or orator at their picnic in September, but it was decided that it "couldn't be did," as he was not a member of the union nor a laborer, but a capitalist and politician. This is really too bad. What is life worth to our Benjamin, if he cannot pose as the friend and champion of the down trodden laborer?—Palmer Journal.

HAY FEVER.—I have been afflicted for twenty years, during the months of August and September, with Hay Fever, and have tried various remedies without relief. I was induced to try Ely's Cream Balm; have used it with favorable results, and can confidently recommend it to all similarly afflicted. ROBERT W. TOWNLEY, (ex-Mayor) Elizabeth, N. J.

I have been a Hay Fever sufferer for three years; have often heard Ely's Cream Balm spoken of in the highest terms; did not take much stock in it because of the many quack medicines. A friend persuaded me to try the Balm and I did so with wonderful success.—This recommendation you can use for the benefit of Hay Fever sufferers. T. S. GEER, Syracuse, N. Y. Price 50 cents.

Heaven Forbid—That we should live much longer, if "crushed strawberry" is to be the color of the future. On the street it meets us, clothing the persons of interesting acquaintances, whom we do not wish to address, for fear of presenting a clouded brow or signs of distress. In church the other day we could neither feel devout nor pay the requisite attention as a literary exercise, in consequence of a crushed strawberry hat we were compelled to look at, just in front of us. The man of the future, if he shall survive the infliction and imposition of "crushed strawberry," and a trace of it remains, will cry out, Good Heavens! what is that? When told it is "crushed strawberry," his only comment will be, the very devil must have stirred up the dye-pot.

TALMAGE ON HUSKING.

EARS OF CORN THAT DON'T MIND IT, AND OTHERS THAT DO.

"My hearers," shouted Rev. Dr. Talmage from his pulpit in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, on a bright Sunday morning last November, "going at the rate of forty miles an hour last Wednesday, I got this sermon on husking. God has arranged that the ear and the husk shall be parted. Every rheumatic pain is but a thrust of the husking-peg: every neuralgic twinge is only a twist of the husker. Thus he takes away what hinders your soul's liberation."

Poetry is permitted to preachers; but the fact is, nobody wants to be husked nor does any one believe that the body is to the soul what the husk is to the corn. On the other hand, Nature teaches us to fight this husking process. Hence most people are thankful for whatever can abate those "rheumatic pains" and "neuralgic twinges."

That, at least, was the view taken of the subject by M. Alfred Baer, a French gentleman, who, at his pleasant home, Greenmont, near Sing Sing, N. Y., said, the other day, to a reporter:

"My life has at times been rendered almost intolerable by Rheumatism. I had tried different remedies without result. But PARKER'S GINGER TONIC gave me great satisfaction. You may tell Messieurs Hiscox & Co., of New York—the proprietors—that I certify to its perfect efficacy, as the Tonic has completely restored my health. Please say, also, that they are welcome to use my name, and ask them to accept my thanks," added the courteous Parisian.

Rheumatism is a symptom of kidney disease, not an affection of the joints or muscles. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC purifies the Blood, and acts with a success beyond that of all other preparations in cases of Dyspepsia, Liver, Kidney and Stomach disorders and in common Coughs and Colds. Prices, 50 cents and $1 per bottle. The latter the more economical.

TERRIBLE SUFFERING.

KIDNEY AND BLADDER COMPLAINTS OF MANY YEARS DURATION—HIS WORD GOOD AS GOLD—CASE OF CITY ASSESSOR FRANCIS GOMARD, 89 SUMNER STREET, LOWELL, MASS.

"His word is as good as a bank note at any bank in Lowell, and I know it." was the opinion of a well known citizen in speaking of City Assessor Francis Gomard. Your reporter found Mr. Gomard at his pleasant home, which, with many others, adorns Sumner street and fronts the charming park of South Common. Mr. Gomard said, "I had been, as many of my friends in Lowell know, a great sufferer from kidney and urinary troubles for a long time. My physician said it was the result of diseased kidneys and enlargement of the prostate gland. I had suffered terribly, and although my doctor's treatment had been the best which this city afforded, I got no better. I said finally, 'Doctor, it's no use. You have done all that is in your power to do, I know that; but I must get help from some other source or die.' Finally I was induced to try Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY, a medicine which had been recommended very highly for kidney diseases. I received help at once. It has acted like a charm with me. Why so? Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY is an honest preparation, and I know it. I didn't think anything would help me, but this has given me better health than any medicine ever prescribed for me. I have recommended it to ever so many of my friends in the city of Lowell, and with the same result. They think there is nothing like Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY."

What Mr. Gomard says can be depended upon, as any one acquainted with the gentleman knows.

Book Notices.

The MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY for July is excellent in every particular. The conclusion of Mrs. Lamb's series of articles, "Wall Street in History," covers thirty or more pages, and is superbly illustrated. It treats of the building of the old Custom House in 1834; of the Collectors of the Port, from the Revolution to the present time; the establishment of the Sub-Treasury; the whole line of Assistant Treasurers; the increase of its business in Wall Street, and present condition; the Assay Office and its workshops; the banks and banking houses; the Clearing-House and its operations, and the New York Stock Exchange —all sketched from a historical and authentic standpoint, and the chapter is as delightfully readable and entertaining as it is informing. "Cannibalism in North America," by Rev. Charles F. Thwing, "The Republic of Texas," by Captain Potter, U. S. A., are well written and entertaining. Joel Benton contributes a charmingly romantic essay, entitled "An Unpublished Chapter in Noah Webster's Life: Love and the Spelling Book." The Departments of Original Documents, Notes and Queries, Historical Societies, etc., are well filled; and the number contains several important Book Notices. Publication Office, 30 Lafayette Place, New York City.

"WONDER BOOKS."—Not books of magic, but solid, choice, classic literature, at prices so low as to seem really amazing to the old-time book-buyer. Among the recent issues of The ELZEVIR LIBRARY, to which we refer and which is receiving, as it well deserves, the strongest commendations of the press and the people, are "Sunshine and Other Stories" for young folks, illustrated, by Mrs. Alden, price 3 cents; "The Civilizations of Asia," by the world-famous historian, Rawlinson, price. 2 cents; a sketch of "Buddhism," by John Caird, the Oriental Scholar, price 2 cents; "Demonstrative Evidences of Evolution," by Huxley, price two cents; "Philosophy of Style," by Herbert Spencer, price 4 cents; "The Great Bridge," containing the Orations of Hon. A. S. Hewitt and Rev. Dr. R. S. Storrs, on the recent occasion of the opening of that greatest engineering work of the world, price 4 cents. The publisher will send a 68 page illustrated catalogue free, upon request, and who also offers to send any of his publications to be paid for after they are received and found satisfactory, to any one giving reasonable evidence of good faith. Address John B. Alden, Publisher, 18 Vesey St., New York.

The August number of FRANK LESLIE'S SUNDAY MAGAZINE is even more brilliant than usual; the variety and excellence of the contents are highly creditable to the editor, and commend it not only to religious but to general readers—they combine most edifying, entertaining and instructive reading. No. VII of Religious Denominations in the United States, "What is Episcopacy?" is contributed by Rev. Charles H. Hall, D. D. There are also interesting articles by Ida Hervey, Rev. W. W. De Hart, Rev. H. M. Field, etc. The charming stories "The City of the Sun," and "Mr. Burke's Nieces," are continued, and there are essays, sketches and poems of rare merit. The editor, T. De Witt Talmage, contributes "Helpfulness," and a sermon to the Home Pulpit, "Spice in Religion." No family should be without this excellent magazine. Price 25 cents a copy; $3 a year, postpaid. Mrs. Frank Leslie, Publisher, 53, 55 and 57 Park Place, New York.

We have received the July number of Brown & Holland's Shorthand News. It has, among other things, an interesting article containing some of the adventures of the late Capt. Sawyer, the noted electrician and reporter, in the pursuit of news, and how he stole one of President Grant's messages before that paper reached the senate. $2 a year, or 20c. a single copy. 50 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

The YOUNG LADIES' JOURNAL for July has been received from the International News Company of New York. It contains the usual large amount of interesting reading matter besides its large number of fashion plates and the mammoth supplement sheet of the latest Parts fashions. Dressmakers cannot afford to be without this excellent magazine. For sale by the Peabody News Company.

HAPPY ONCE MORE. — St. Louis, Mo.—A Chronicle reporter was told by Mr. Alfred J. Papin, of this city, that his nephew had the most obstinate case of inflammatory rheumatism which baffled all kinds of treatment until St. Jacobs Oil, the great pain-conquerer, was used. It cured the young man, and he recommends it as the greatest cure for pains in the world.

A patent medicine manufacturer died in New York last week. Before he died his friends asked him how he would like to be buried. He had just strength left to say: "Insert me top column next to reading matter 52 times, electro by mail," and he closed his eyes, and then passed away to that bourne where there are no omissions nor wrong insertions.

Damonia, the new remedy advertised in our columns, is a magnetic mineral earth lately discovered in Texas, which a careful analysis of our most prominent chemists declares to contain the most potent medical ingredients. A trial is recommended.

(Correspondent of the Press.)

DENVER, COLORADO, June 18, 1883.

Everything is booming in Colorado. During the past two months the people have had a surprise like that of a year ago, in the shape of a series of heavy showers of rain, when always, heretofore, the rule has been that "it never rains in Colorado." Business of all kinds is much better than was the case a few months ago. There was quite a depression in business during the winter, and there were many idle ones who were idle from necessity. But now there is work and a better state of affairs generally. Colorado's staple industry—mining—has been retarded this spring, owing to an unusual disposition to linger on the part of the snow. But that has mostly departed, and operations are going on with fine prospects. Generally, every year, at the opening of the mining season, some special district is "boomed" with or without any especial recommendation in the qualities of the locality boomed. Sometimes, of course, the place is rich in opportunities for good strikes, but oftentimes the excitement is caused by parties who are merely interested in getting up a rush to the place, in order to dispose of land for which there is not a ready sale, and for the sake of making business better there by the sudden influx of people. Old prospectors and miners of experience always regard reports of rich strikes in a new locality with caution—not to say with suspicion—but there are always plenty of new comers or members of the great army of those who are looking for a streak of luck, who are ready to bite at any bait. Along in the winter there was a boom up in Jamestown, or, as it is familiarly called, "Jimtown," in Boulder county. Boulder is quite near this city, and the reports coming in thick and fast that "Jimtown" was going to be a second Leadville, added to the fact that Denver was full of unemployed people, made a sudden rush in that direction. Adventurers of all sorts, mechanics out of work, young men from the east without trades and without knowledge as to how they were going to eat from one day to another, saloon keepers, bar tenders, gamblers and prostitutes, flocked to "Jimtown."—The land was "staked and claimed" for miles away from the town. People flocked to restaurants and paid great money for indifferent meals, and slept in stores upon the counters, chairs, the floor, or in tents, or almost any kind of place.

Then the excitement died out and the adventurers deserted "Jimtown" as rats desert a sinking ship. But some stayed and worked steadily and patiently, and now the news comes, not of brilliant strikes and sudden fortunes, but of good, steady returns for labor and capital invested, and the delvers are reaping their reward. The reports from the mining districts generally are to the effect that work is paying mostly in the steady, moderate way, which aggregates a large season's work, although there are some great strikes being made and some rich fields being opened. Perhaps the most wonderful feature of the prosperous season is that in many, very many, cases, old mines and claims which had been abandoned as useless or worked out are now being worked successfully, and the supply of ore is apparently inexhaustible. From Leadville, the Mecca of prospectors five years ago, the reports come that mining operations indicate that the present will be the most prosperous year which that locality has seen since the first one of its great boom.

The ranch business and the cattle interests promise great returns from investments also, and the prospects in those fields are brightened from the fact of the visits of heavy rains, which will make grazing, as well as agriculture, much more profitable. These rains have been a source of great surprise to the pioneers, who have always preached upon the text of Colorado's great dryness. But I am told by those who ought to know, that in Nebraska's early days rain was a rare visitor.—When the country became more settled and cultivated, and vegetation called for rain, bounteous Nature provided.—If the rains of this spring and the last should become an annual experience, the great obstacle in the way of successful agriculture, or rather other than an expensive mode of agriculture—irrigation—will be removed, and another revenue to the wealth of Colorado will be established.

In the cities, particularly in Denver, business is lively. The merchants, and in fact all of the business men, are preparing for the great rush of summer visitors, a rush which will, this year, be augmented by four special attractions, viz.: The Exposition, the National Encampment of the G. A. R., the Convocation of the General Grand Chapter of Royal Arch Masons and the visit of the Knights Templar, who will stop here on their way to San Francisco. These attractions will swell the multitude which is great in ordinary times.

The Exposition of the National Mining and Industrial Association will open on the 17th day of July and continue until the 30th of September. The first exhibition was held in the building erected for the purpose last year, beginning on the first of August and continuing for two months. It was a wonderful affair, considering that only about six months elapsed from the time the enterprise was suggested and the day of opening, during which time the association was organized, incorporated, the building erected and the idea formally announced and advertised throughout the country. The display of the specimens of ores and minerals, as well as mining implements and machines, was never before equalled anywhere, and the display of general miscellany in merchandise, manufacture, agricultural products and in fine arts, was highly creditable and extensive.—It was, all in all, a great success, but it was only an experiment, and as such only was satisfactory to its projectors. The exhibition is to be an annual affair, and in arranging for this, the second of the series, whatever of error appeared in the details of the management then will be carefully avoided this year.—Nearly a year has been spent in preparing for this, and the indications point to a tremendous affair as the result. The building has been enlarged by the addition of two large annexes, which will make the entire building one-eighth of a mile in length. The grounds about it have been beautified with beds of flowers, blue grass, trees, shrubs, and a fine stand of rye. There are also some specimens of cactus from both Old and New Mexico. The exhibition of last year was a great success. It was the first of a series which will be continued for an indefinite period, annually.—There was probably the largest amount of ores and mineral specimens ever collected. Besides this precious display, there was a large art display, and also an immense exhibit of miscellaneous merchandise, manufactured articles, new inventions and agricultural products. The assurances of sympathy and encouragement have flowed in from every direction, and there will be displays from about every state in the Union, and from the Territories.—Commissioners have been appointed from Maine, Vermont, Rhode Island, West Virginia, the Old Dominion and Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, as well as from the states and territories of the new West. I am sorry, as a native of the Old Bay State, that Governor Butler has been so busy with the Tewksbury Almshouse affair as to overlook the matter of having Massachusetts represented. But he may attend to the matter, yet.

The National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic will be held in this city beginning with the 24th of July. The work is going on now arranging the camp to accommodate from 30,000 to 50,000 men. A mess house capable of seating eleven hundred at a meal will be one of the features. The Grand Army is very large and effective in this state, and the men are all enthusiastic over the prospect of the Encampment. The Legislature last winter appropriated $21,000 for the entertainment of the visitors.

The Masons will probably make a somewhat extended tour of the state at the close of ceremonies here. In Leadville, particularly, the members of the Order are quite anxious to entertain the brethren from the East. In my next letter I will endeavor to give more in detail some of the work which is being done towards making the summer of 1883 one of the liveliest and most brilliant which Denver has ever seen.

EASTERN ASSOCIATES.—This Association has features that no other Association has, and they are of great value, especially to a salaried man or a man of moderate means.

First, Permanent Disability.—A great many people who have well provided for those dependent upon them, in the event of death, often ask themselves what they will do in case of disability, when they can no longer work to support their family and pay assessments on their insurance. The Eastern Associates answers this question; as, in case of permanent disability (from any cause), it pays to the member disabled one-half the amount of the certificate, the balance at death. Hundreds of men and women are joining this Association for this Life Benefit.

Second, Reserve Fund.—The Eastern Associates reserves from one-third to one-half of the yearly dues to pay death losses. The cost for insurance, the death rate being the same, will, therefore, be less than in any other mutual aid society. This fund is a special feature of the Eastern Associates. It enables the management to limit the number of assessments to be called in any one year. Any additional sum required, to be paid from the Reserve fund.

Third, Few Assessments.—The annoyance of frequent assessments is avoided in this Association by placing each member's assessment at such a rate that not more than three or four calls will be necessary in any one year to pay the average death losses. The smaller in number the assessments, the smaller, proportionately, the expenses of the Association, therefore the larger will be the Reserve Fund, in which every member has an interest.

Fourth, Non-Forfeiture.—It is often the case that members of co-operative associations lose their membership by sickness or neglect to pay their assessments within the prescribed time, when, in fact they intended to pay them. Any member of the Eastern Associates not paying his assessment, after a new member has paid one assessment (unless they request their membership to cease), the assessment will be paid from the Reserve fund; and an assessment so paid shall be charged to the delinquent, with an additional ten per cent., which fine and assessment must be paid on or before a second assessment is due.

The plan of a Life and Death Benefit, which are special features of the Eastern Associates, meets the want of the masses; and our rapidly increasing membership is evidence that we are in advance of the usual plan of assessment associations. Mr. Shorey, the Secretary, who is well known among the members of the N. E. Relief, is in town every Friday looking after the interests of the Eastern Associates.

In our issue of last week, we made the statement that J. Edwin Davis, son of Hon. Joseph Davis, was the only member of the Harvard graduating class from this city. This is not the case, for Mr. Edward Cummings, son of Edward N. Cummings, of the firm of Welch & Cummings, was also a member of the graduating class. This young man graduated with marked distinction, as the reports of the graduating exercises go to show, and the honors won by Mr. Cummings any young man may well feel proud of. At twenty-two years of age, with this start, the future should look bright and hopeful to our promising young fellow-citizen.—Lynn Union.

Mrs. Caroline A. Johnson, wife of Capt. James A. Johnson, died Monday forenoon, after a sickness of some six month's duration. In March last she was thought to be dying for several days, but she rallied from that condition and recently has been able to ride out, and was considered out of danger, until she was prostrated by a shock on Saturday, which soon took her to the final home. She leaves a husband in poor health, and two children, Etta and Harry, and numerous relatives and friends to mourn the loss of a kind, loving and genial friend. The funeral was from her residence on Conant street, on Thursday afternoon, and was attended by her cousin, Rev. W. G. Sperry of Peabody.—Danvers Mirror.

A practical business education for young men and women is the thing most desired in this practical age, and nowhere can such an education be better obtained than at the old established and popular Bryant & Stratton Com'l School of Boston, whose principal, Mr. H. E. Hibbard, has been eminently successful in graduating well equipped, self-reliant pupils of both sexes, who are acceptably filling positions of trust in all our large cities.

The following lines by Emerson are respectfully dedicated to a Peabody young man soon to be married:—

You will find, my dear boy, that the dearly-prized kiss,
Which in rapture you snatched from the half-willing miss,
Is sweeter by far than the legalized kisses
You give the same girl when you've made her a Mrs.

"TEXAS SIFTINGS." REAL ONES.—The following is from a Texas letter of June 27. The locality is within a hundred miles of San Antonio, to the north. "It is more than three months since any rain of consequence has fallen; if it doesn't come soon there will be no hope of a corn crop to amount to anything, and corn is the crop for this part of the country where 'corn-bread and bacon' are the staples. It has been very hot; the sun seems scorching; to step out on the ground is burning to the feet, and the hot air coming over the white clay is sometimes like that from a hot fire. Monday the thermometer was 103°."

The writer, a cultured lady, from Essex County, in writing of the climate says: "Every one admits that Texas climate and life, at their best, tell very quickly on people, especially on women, so I do not think it any wonder that I look old."

In writing of a dress as shown in a recently received photograph she says: "You can have no idea how pleasant it is to see people dressed nicely. 'Our town' (from which she is distant ten miles)' is becoming quite a place for dress and fashion, but as I rarely go there, and none of it comes to me, calico dresses and colored shirts and overalls are about all I see; and really they are the only suitable garments for such a dirty place."

The letter closes as follows: "All signs of rain have gone, and the sky is cloudless. I fear we are doomed to dryness. Springs that usually hold out are dry; water in the creek doesn't run at all, only a little stands in spots: feed is drying up very fast which means that the cows will soon have to be turned out; and to many people the drouth will mean dreadful things, their crops being their whole dependence. Many people here mortgage their crops in advance—a Southern custom—and with the prices charged it seems as if ruin is inevitable to many. Truly, New England with its east winds and cold is more to be depended upon."

The above is written from a region where, in January last, was experienced an ice storm as severe as is ever seen in Massachusetts, and where, though snow is rarely if ever seen, sheep and lambs perish on account of the cold "northers."

Young man, go to Texas—if you want to—but don't take your family.

Poet's Corner.

The Phantom Ship.

We stood on the haunted island,
We stood by the haunted bay;
The stars were all over the skyland,
But the moon had loitered away.

The lights of fisher-boats glimmered,
The beacon glowed steady and red,
The calm sea icily shimmered
Like the eye of one who is dead.

Then, all alone on the ocean,
The ghost of the island came—
The ghost of a vessel in motion,
The ghost of a vessel in flame.

It shone with vaporous brightness—
A glamour of tremulous rays;
It was not fire, but the whiteness
Of a ghost of a perished blaze.

We watched it with all our vision,
We watched it doubting and dumb;
We heard of the thing with derision,
But we surely beheld it come.

We saw it glide o'er the water,
A phantom of pallid fire;
We saw it tumble and totter
To ruin, and then flash higher.

Again and again to leeward
Its ghastly rigging fell o'er;
At last, far away to seaward,
It foundered, and rose no more.

We had watched it with all our vision,
We had watched it with eye and glass;
And gone were doubt and derision,
For surely we saw it pass.

Through many a winter and summer,
As the sons of the island know,
The gleam of this ghostly comer
Has prophesied storm and woe—

This ghost of a great three-master
Which went in the days of yore
To fell and fiery disaster
Right off the Block Island shore.

"Two Little Faces."

BY ESSIE LEWIS.

Two dear little heads on a pillow so white,
A fond mother bending over to kiss them good night;
From her heart, welling up, a great gush of love,
As she silently prays to the Father above:

"Oh, God! save my babies and keep them from harm,
And protect them within thy sheltering arm;
Oh! guard them, dear Lord, until morning shall light
Safe through the drear darkness and terror of night."

And, stooping, she gives them one last, fond embrace,
Affectionately kissing each dear little face,
As lovely and pure on the pillow they lay,
Then slowly she moves from the bedside away.

Agent's Herald.

Selected Story.

A Lucky Ship.

It was about twelve o'clock on a dark, cold February night; the rain had been pouring down steadily for several days. One could hardly imagine a more bleak, desolate station than Elmwood on that night, with one lamp making darkness visible, the platform an inch deep in rain, and a sleepy station-master and porter giving the only indications of life.

Mr. Hugh Lambert, as he got out of the train and went to look after his baggage, felt very thankful that he had only a mile to drive before reaching home. He was a man of about forty, old for his years and slightly gray; in figure he was tall and well made, and his face had an expression of cleverness.

As a rule few passengers alighted at Elmwood by that late train; but on this night there were two besides Hugh Lambert—a young lady and her maid, with a goodly pile of luggage. Hugh was wondering a little as to where they could be going, when he heard the girl ask the station-master if there was a carriage waiting from Mrs. Newton, of Priarton.

'Why, the road has been blocked since six o'clock, miss! There's been a big land slip, and they're working all night to git it cleared. I don't think you'll get to Priarton this week, what with the slip and the floods.'

'What am I to do?' exclaimed the girl, with a face of blank dispair.

'Is there no other road to get to Priarton?'

Hugh Lambert was listening with some interest. Mrs. Newton was his nearest neighbor, and a great friend of his; this must be her niece, of whom he had often heard. He approached the lady and raised his hat courteously.

'I am sorry to say there is no other road to Priarton; nor is there any way of getting there to-night. I heard of the land slip only about an hour ago, and know that the road is completely blocked.'

'What can I do?' the girl asked again. 'Is there any inn here, or must I take the next train back to the nearest town?'

'The last train's gone an hour; there ain't no inn in the country-side save publics'—this from the porter.

'You must let me arrange this matter for you,' said Hugh Lambert. 'I think I must be speaking to Mrs. Newton's niece, Miss Nayton?'

'You have guessed rightly;' and Dorothy Nayton looked up eagerly, delighted to find some one to whom she was known, if only by name.

She was a bright little body, pleasant looking, though she could not lay claim to great beauty—a brunette with a clear olive complexion, dark eyes, and a straight nose. She had crossed from her home that afternoon, she told her new acquaintance; and so of course her aunt might not have expected her to arrive so early.

'You must let me take care of you,' Lambert said. 'My place is close by. I will take you there, and send a message to your aunt as soon as possible to let her know that you are safe.'

Just at that minute a horse was heard galloping up the dark road, and presently a man came hurrying into the station.

'Is there a young lady here for Priarton?' he asked.

Dorothy went forward eagerly.

'If you please, miss, here's a note from Mrs. Newton. I've been four hours getting here; I had to ride twelve miles round, for the road is blocked and the floods are out. I had to get a boat at the low meadows, and borrow another horse on this side; and this has delayed me in getting here.'

Hardly waiting to listen to this long explanation from the old coachman, Dorothy tore open and read:

"My Dearest Child.—I am in great distress. The road between here and the station has been blocked by a tremendous landslip; so it is impossible to send the carriage to meet you. I have therefore forwarded a note to my great friend, Hugh Lambert, asking him to send for you and give you and your maid shelter for the night, till we see what is to be done. He is the only neighbor on that side of the landslip, and is so charming you need not mind going to him; it is indeed the only thing to be done. In great haste,

Your loving aunt,
Mary Newton."

The coachman had also given Hugh Lambert a note.

'I was to have left it at Leyton, sir,' he said; 'but I heard you was coming by this train.'

Lambert glanced at the contents, and then turned to Dorothy.

'Your aunt has kindly trusted you to me; so now you won't mind accompanying me home, will you?' he asked.

'I think it is you who ought to mind,' was Dorothy's answer. 'I am afraid we shall be giving you so much trouble. It is very good of you.'

A minute later she was seated beside him in the dog cart, spinning along the dark roads into what was to her an unknown country.

Dorothy was very tired, and was thankful to reach the house and be handed over to the care of the housekeeper. Very soon she was fast asleep in an old-fashioned, oak-panelled room that would have seemed very ghostly to her but that she was too fatigued to take much heed of her surroundings; and, beside, her maid was in the dressing room and within call.

The next morning Dorothy was down for half-past nine breakfast, and was shown into a bright little morning-room. Mr. Lambert met her, and was so kind and anxious to make her happy and at home that she very soon found herself talking to him as if she had known him for years, instead of his being an acquaintance of a few hours only. She was rather an unconventional little person, and by no means stiff or cold. She had warm hearted manners, and looked at the world in a trustful way, believing people and trusting in them firmly, unless she found they were not to be depended upon, instead of proving before trusting, as colder-natured and perhaps wiser folks do. She had been brought up by an old uncle, for whom her elder sister kept house. They had no brothers, and their parents had both died years before. Mrs. Newton was their mother's sister-in-law; but her husband had quarreled with the girl's uncle and guardian, Mr. Nayton; so it was not till after the death of the latter that Dorothy and her sister had been allowed to go to Priarton. Now however they had hoped to spend a good deal of time there; but this was Dorothy's first visit.

Mary Nayton, her sister, was about twenty-seven and exceedingly placid and sensible, but she took things so quietly that Dorothy was always allowed to go her own way and do whatever she liked; consequently, at twenty-three, she had learned to think and act for herself, and, as her nature was impulsive and warm-hearted, she indulged in a great many theories of her own, hated conventionalities, believed firmly in Platonic friendships, and not unfrequently got into trouble in consequence.

It very soon struck Hugh Lambert that she was different from most of the girls he had met, and she interested him accordingly.

It was with a feeling of relief that he found the road would be impassable for some days; so he wrote to Mrs. Newton, begging her to let Dorothy remain with him, instead of returning home, and asked an elderly cousin who lived a few stations off to come and act as chaperon.

The old lady accepted the invitation and the post alloted her; but, as she was a great invalid, Dorothy and Hugh were constantly left alone together. He liked to sit in the dusk and hear her sweet voice singing to him, to watch her arranging flowers, and to consult her about the garden. The girl felt supremely happy—he was so kind to her, such an agreeable companion in every way, that she thoroughly enjoyed his society.

A fortnight went by, and the road was pronounced perfectly safe; even the floods had subsided. So Hugh had no excuse for detaining his fair guest longer; and, though very reluctant to part with her, he drove her over to Priarton.

She was standing in the hall as he left that night, after dinner, and held out her hand to say good-by.

'I can't thank you enough for all your kindness,' she said, softly.

'Nay, my child, I cannot tell you what a pleasure it has been to me; but perhaps you will know some day,' he replied, and she went upstairs wondering what he meant.

She believed so firmly in Platonic friendship that she would not let herself think that the feeling toward Hugh Lambert was anything else; and, although she knew he disbelieved in her theory in the abstract—for they had argued the subject very warmly—still she thought that his sentiments were well defined in her case.

Hugh Lambert felt as if something very bright had come into his life since he had known Dorothy. She was so quaint and naive in speech, new and fresh with her ideas and theories, so free and unaffected in manner, and yet so womanly withal, that during those few days they had spent together she had completely won his heart. But he was not likely to act on the spur of the moment; he was so much older than she, how could he ever expect that bright little body to regard him as anything but a steady-going friend?

But still, day after day, he would ride over to see her at Priarton, and when he returned would sit and think of how she looked in the rooms that now seemed so desolate. How he longed in the evening for the sound of her voice singing to him, 'The Land o' the Leal' or 'Auld Robin Gray!'

And Dorothy began to watch for his coming, and, if, by chance, something detained him at home, how long the day seemed and how uninteresting everything was! At first she justified it to herself by the thought of her friendship to him—a friendship which had ripened quickly in the peculiar circumstances of their meeting; but little by little as time passed, and she had been at Priarton nearly three months, it dawned upon the girl that the feeling she entertained for Hugh Lambert was something more than mere friendship. She fought against herself with all the strength of her nature; she could not bear to prove false to her own theories,, and traitor to her favorite cause; but finally she felt the struggle was hopeless, and made up her mind to keep her secret securely locked in her own bosom.

While gathering primroses one sweet spring afternoon, Dorothy heard a step crushing the dead leaves, and saw Hugh coming toward her.

'I want to speak to you,' he said. 'Will you walk with me a little?'

Presently he turned sharply and took both her hands, and looking more in earnest than she had ever seen him look.

'I can't stand this any longer!' he cried out. 'I must know my fate one way or the other. It is true that I am years older, but no one will ever care for you better than I do. If you cannot love me in return, I will go away and never worry you any more. I give you my word. Am I to go, Dorothy?'

'Go? oh, no!' she gasped out, hardly able to realize what he was saying, only feeling that she could not breathe.

Not long afterward there was a happy wedding at the dear old home and then Dorothy came back to brighten up the old house at Leyton.

Hugh Lambert would have been less or more than a man if he could have resisted triumphing over her a little; and, as they went into the library, where he and she had often argued together, and she had bravely defended her theories, he turned and said:

'By-the-by, Dorothy, who was right, after all, about Platonic friendships?'

I heard a very funny story the other day, about a well-known clergyman, whose name, if given, would make the recital all the more amusing; but I will spare his blushes and permit him to remain unknown to all except those who were present on the occasion to which I am about to refer. The clergyman had been called to a new pastorate, and when he entered the pulpit for the first time, he found the usual notices of meetings carefully placed in the Bible, the edges of the paper just protruding. The service progressed very smoothly until the time for reading the notices arrived. The clergyman read these with proper care, and was just about to give out a hymn, when, in turning over the Bible, his eye fell upon a note which had before escaped his observation. Glancing at it hurriedly, he saw that it should be read at that time, and, accordingly, he proceeded as follows: "There is one more matter which had nearly escaped my attention. Mr. A.——" (reading the note taken from the Bible) "requests the prayers of this church, that the death of his beloved wife may be sanctified to him." An ominous stir in the congregation warned the clergyman that he had made a mistake, but he could not understand it until he was told, after the service, that the note he had read was a year old, and Mr. A—— was present on this occasion, for the first time, with his blushing bride of only four days. I have observed that since this occurrence my reverend friend always looks very carefully at the dates of all notices and requests before he reads them.

A Pretty Girl Speculator.—Today, in coming from the treasury building, I met a beautiful girl walking slowly past one of those broker's offices. She was dressed neatly and exquisitely in white, and was so attractive in appearance as to be generally observed. She was one of the prettiest of the few pretty girls in the treasury. Knowing her quite well, and noticing her apparent anxiety, I asked her what the trouble was. She said she wanted to know what Northern Pacific common was quoted at, and requested me to step into the broker's office and look at the quotations on the big blackboard. I complied with the request, and informed her that Northern Pacific was strong at 52 1-8. She was much elated at the news, saying that she was better off than she expected by a good many dollars. She had bought Northern Pacific at 50 several weeks ago on a small margin, and the stock had hugged that figure so long that she began to fear she would be "wiped out." She went back to her work with a glad heart, and no doubt with visions of new dresses and bonnets and a trip to the seashore or mountains when vacation comes in August. "Every dog has its day," and in dog-days all the department clerks have their days, which number thirty.—Washington Capital.

Those who have had to do with the examination papers of teachers and students will recognize a very familiar look in the following choice selections from some recent reports of examinations in various quarters:

Question. What is the location of the heart?

Answers. 1. In the left cavity of the stomach.

2. The function of the heart is between the lungs.

3. The thorax.

Question. Describe the process of digestion.

Answer. The process of digestion is that we should never eat fat because the food does not digest.

Question. Describe the action of the skin.

Answer. The skin discharges a function called perspiration.

Question. What is the scapula?

Answer. The back part of the top of the head, which an Indian takes off in battle.

Question. Mention any occupation which you consider injurious to health, giving reasons for your answer.

Answers. 1. When you have an illness it makes your health bad, as well as being a disease.

2. Occupations which are injurious to health are carbolic acid gas, which is impure blood.

3. We ought to go into the country for a few weeks to take plenty of fresh air to make us healthy and strong every year.

4. A stone-mason's work is injurious, because when he is chipping he breathes in all the little chips, and thus they are taken into the lungs.

5. A boot-maker's trade is very injurious, because the boot-makers always press the boot against the thorax, and therefore it presses the thorax in and it touches the heart, and if they do not die they are crippled for life.

6. Every carpenter or mason should wear a pad over the mouth.

7. If a lawyer does not wear spectacles he will be sure to lose his sight.

Question. What is a thermometer?

Answer. It is a magnetic needle suspended in a vacuum in a column of electricity.

Question. Define tautology.

Answer. Taught—ology, that is the science of teaching.

Question. Who was Daniel Boone?

Answer. The son of the old man Boone.

Question. Describe the Fauna and Flora of Europe.

Answer. The Fauna and Flora rise in the Ural Mountains, flow in a southerly direction, and empty into the Mediterranean Sea.

How to Spoil Things.—To spoil tea—boil it.

To spoil coffee—boil it.

To spoil steak—fry it.

To spoil pies—make them too rich.

To spoil bread—use poor flour and sour yeast, and then let it rise until too light and it runs over.

To spoil pancakes—bake on a lukewarm griddle.

To spoil potatoes—let them lie and soak in the water in which they are boiled.

To spoil carpets—sweep with a stiff, hall-worn broom.

To spoil a custard—bake it too long.

To spoil butter—do not work out all the buttermilk.

To spoil scissors—cut everything, from a sheet of paper to a piece of cast iron.

To spoil house plants—water them too much.

To spoil garments in making—cut them out carelessly and run all of the seams.

To spoil a breakfast—grumble all the time while eating.

To spoil a school—change teachers every time any one in the district finds fault with them.

To spoil children—humor them to every thing that they may happen to think they want.

To spoil a home—change it as soon as you are comfortably settled.

At the public baths at the Vineyard recently an impatient young man walked up to the door of one of the compartments and, knocking on the door of same, testily inquired: "When in blazes are you going to get those trousers on?" There was a faint giggle and a silvery voice replied: "When I get married, I suppose!" He had mistaken the door; that's all.

"It's no use to feel me wrist, doctor," said Pat, when the physician began taking the pulse. "The pain is not there, it's in me head entoirly.

An elegant little smoke, Pearl of Savoy, at Geo. Stevens'.

His Baby Was Dead.

The jolly conductor had been laying off for a few days on account of sickness at home, but one day he appeared on his train, looking pale, and the brakeman, who had run with him for years, knew that the conductor's mind was away at the bedside of his sick baby. With punch in hand and his heart in his throat the conductor entered the smoking car and said "Tickets," in a voice not at all like its usual sound. It was more like an appeal to his Heavenly Father to watch over the baby at home. Four drummers were sitting together in two seats, all good friends of the conductor, and as he took their thousand mile tickets to punch, one said, "Old man, you were up late last night. Beware of the wine cup," and he laughed, and the other boys laughed, and the conductor tried to smile, but he couldn't. Another drummer who had traveled with the conductor for years, and loved him like a brother, thinking he was a little off, said, "O, boys, wait till he goes through the train and collects a few cash fares, and he will brighten up. Then I will tell him the last story," and they all laughed at their old friend, and he punched the last of their tickets and went on with a forced smile, and as a tear drop rolled down his dark cheek the boys thought he had a cinder in his eye. The last drummer slapped him on the arm and said, "come back soon to your own chickabiddy," and as he went out of the car a laugh arose, and he stood on the platform a minute because he felt faint, and then entered the other car.—He knew almost every passenger, and on any other day he would have been proud to have them speak to him as they did, and chaff and joke, but that day every word seemed to be a bullet. He was present in body, but his mind was far away, and when he put a check in the band of a lady's turban hat, instead of putting it on the window, and she blushed, and the passengers laughed, they thought he did it for a joke, but it was because he did not know what he was doing, his mind being with his sick baby at home. He hurried along and a lady with a little three year old girl was next, a child just the age of his sick one. The mother had thought it would please the conductor to let the child hand the ticket to him, and the little one had the ticket in its fat hand, and was shrinking back behind the mamma, trying to muster up courage to hand the ticket to the big conductor, who had often held her in his lap when she was on his train, he would laugh so hearty that the child would be surprised, and he would tell her of his little baby at home. The child peeked around mamma's shoulder, and saw the conductor before he saw her, and he looked so changed and sad that the little one opened her eyes in wonder, and handed up the ticket carefully as though he would bite, and when he saw her he almost fainted, and when she said, "where's 'oor baby," he thought his heart would jump out of his breast. The tears ran down his face and he whispered, "she may be dying now," and as he went out on the platform at a station he felt that it would almost be a mercy if the train would run over him.

He went in the car and finished his work, and returned to the smoker and sat down in the end seat, then got nervous and went in the baggage car, passing the large hearted drummers, who were full of fun and wanted him to be, and they said, "come, old boy, sit down here and have a smoke," but he said in a husky voice that he hadn't time, and as he went out the door he braced up enough to turn and smile at the boys through the window and throw a kiss at them, because he didn't want them to think he would go back entirely on old friends, but when he got in the baggage car and sat down in a chair, he looked like a man that had lost every friend. At the next station a woman with a little girl was cross to the child, and jerked it along by the arm, and he snatched the little one from the mother and tenderly lifted it on the car, and the mother looked indignant, and she got on the car and pushed the little one along the aisle, and set it down in the seat as though she would like to break its bones, and the conductor looked at her as though, if she were a man, he would everlastingly wipe the platform with her. He got on the car in the rear of the smoker that time, because his old friends, the drummers, were so thoughtless of his feelings. He did not realize that they were unaware of his sorrow. Every kindly expression from the passengers seemed to him like an unfeeling remark, and he would have given a month's salary to have been at home, or anywhere that everybody felt as bad as he did. At the next station he got a dispatch, and his hand shook like a leaf, and he dare not look at it out doors, but he went in the smoker and sat down in front of the drummers, and opened the dispatch, glanced at it and put his head on his hand and leaned his elbow on the window. The boys looked at him and one said, not thinking that anything had occurred more than the usual order to hold the train for another to pass, "Hello, the old man has got his discharge. O, I have been expecting it since he collected that twenty cents from the tramp last week and knocked it down." Then they laughed, and one of the boys touched the conductor on the shoulder and said, "Never mind, old boy, us fellows will see you through. We will get a sample case for you to carry."—The conductor reached the dispatch over to the traveling man, and said "read it," and the friend read, "Your baby is dead; come back on No. —. Give your train to your head brakeman." It was signed by the division superintendent.

The four pair of eyes that read the dispatch had tears in them, and four throats choked up so it was a minute before anybody could speak, and then one of the boys went and sat down by the conductor, who was crying like a child, and said, "Old friend, all of us have babies at home, and not a one of us would have joked you had we known of your sorrow. Forgive us, old pard." The conductor said it was all right, and he knew they pitied him, but it had almost broken his heart to have them talk so, and he went in the baggage car to prepare to leave the train at the next station. As he left the train four large hearted drummers, who looked as though they, too, had been bereaved, shook hands tenderly with the conductor, and bid him good bye, and then went in the car and agreed that they couldn't be too careful about their levity, and their thoughts were all the afternoon with the stricken conductor and his dead baby. When the brakeman went through the train with his pale face and took tickets the passengers knew something had happened, and to every question he said, "The conductor's baby is dead and he has gone back," and then every passenger looked as though it was a funeral train, and a hundred hearts felt sorry for their old friend, and none more so than the hearts of the drummers. At the funeral there was a bank of flowers that almost covered the little coffin, which came by express from two hundred miles away, and the conductor will always believe the flowers came from the drummers, and he was right.—Peck's Sun.

The system of feeing waiters is becoming more burdensome and exacting than ever. At hotels, restaurants, on drawing room cars, on steamboats and steamships, the tribute is demanded and unfortunate is the lot of that person who does not comply. The income from this source is no doubt divided among a horde of greedy cormorants, each of whom is able to profit largely at the expense of the public, who after paying exorbitant charges for every thing received, are compelled to pay tribute to them. The proprietors and managers also profit through this means as instead of paying for the services of those in these various positions, they are able to charge them a bonus for the privilege of serving. The saloon steward of some ocean steamship lines has been known to pay the chief steward two hundred and fifty dollars a season for the privilege of filling the place. How long will people tamely submit to these impositions? Some far-seeing fellow will some time cut off all these extra expenses and bring the charges for entertainment or transportation down to bed-rock rates. He will then be overwhelmed with patronage. Others will be obliged to follow suit or go to the wall. People will not always allow themselves to be fleeced even if it is fashionable to silently endure it at this time.—Lynn Union.

A TELEPHONE TRICK.—New Yorkers have improved upon the telephone. A Fulton market butcher named Dresher, rigged up a little black walnut box and a bell in his stand, and ran a rope from the bell underneath the counter. Whenever there was a rush of trade he would pull the rope and then rush to the box, call "Hello! hello!" and, after holding his ear to the apparatus, would give out a big order to his assistant, as if he were repeating some message that had come over a telephone. Thus in the course of a day he would appear to get orders from the Vanderbilts, the mayor, the big hotels, and the principal steamship companies. The other day while he was waiting on a shrewd old lady and while the stand was filled with buyers, he worked the false telephone crying, "Ned, send three firkins of butter to French's Hotel."

"Now look here, Mr. Dresher," said the old lady. "I've often wondered at the tremendous business you've been doing with that machine, and now you've betrayed yourself. French's Hotel has been closed four months." It broke Dresher all up.

A Pennsylvania young woman is said to have cured herself of convulsions by practicing on a cornet. There must be one or two in town who are trying the same cure. The only trouble with the remedy is, that it transfers the convulsions to the innocent and helpless neighbors who are obliged to listen.—Palmer Journal.

Miscellaneous.

EATING AT NIGHT.—A Boston physician says popularly it is thought injurious, but unless dinner or supper has been late, or the stomach disordered, it is harmless and beneficial if one is hungry. Invalids and the delicate should always eat at bedtime. This seems heretical, but is not. Animals after eating instinctively sleep. Human beings become drowsy after a full meal. Why? Because blood is solicited toward the stomach to supply the juices needed in digestion. Hence the brain receives less blood than during fasting, becomes pale and the powers grow dormant. Sleep therefore ensues. This is physiological. The sinking in sleeplessness is a call for food. Wakefulness often is merely a symptom of hunger. Gratify the desire and you fall asleep. The feeble will be stronger at dawn if they eat on going to bed. Fourteen hours lie between supper and breakfast. By that time the fuel for the body has become expended. Consequently, the morning toilet fatigues many. Let such eat at bedtime and take a glass of warm milk or beef tea after rising. Increased vigor will result. True. Yet when hungry we must eat. Does the infant's stomach rest as long as the adults? The latter eats often, merely because his food requires more time for digestion. Seldom can one remain awake until half-past ten or eleven without hunger. Satisfy it and sleep will be sounder. During the night give wakeful children food. Sleep will follow. The sick should invariably eat during the night. This is imperative. At night, the delicate and children may take, slowly, warm milk, beef tea, or oat-meal gruel. Vigorous adults may also eat bread and milk, cold beef, mutton, chicken and bread, raw oysters, all, of course, in moderation. Do not eat if not hungry. Eat if you are.

An item in last week's Sun in regard to the scarcity of private soldiers of the late war, has developed the fact that there are two residing in Wisconsin, as we have received that number of postals from soldiers who freely admit that they served in the army and were not commissioned. It seems as though there ought to be more than two out of fifty thousand who went from the state, when officers are so plenty, and we would take it as a favor if they would send their addresses to this office. The Sun is about to offer a premium of a hundred dollars towards paying campaign expenses, to the dominant political party of any county in the state which will nominate a private soldier for sheriff, at the next election. On one or two occasions since the war, private soldiers hrve been elected constables, and sealers of weights and measures, and one was elected coroner, but the combined salary of all of them was less than forty dollars a year. If the Sun can find a private soldier alive, and get him elected to a paying office it will consider a hundred dollars well invested.—Peck's Sun.

Robert Bonner, of New York, editor of the Ledger and one of the most successful advertisers of the day, says of advertising in answer to a correspondent: "One of the points of good advertising is to address the same people over and over again. For instance: Suppose you were introduced to the President, with about 500 others, the chances are that the President would not remember you. But if you had an opportunity of seeing him again, and said, 'Mr. President, I am Charles Wolsey, of Brooklyn; Senator So-and-So did me the honor of introducing me to you,' and you did this two or three times, you will be sure to be remembered. In the same way an advertisement presented once is forgotten almost invariably, and so thrown away, while one presented three or four times makes an impression." Mr. Bonner ought to be a good judge of such things, as a great part of the fortune he has amassed was acquired through judicious and persistent advertising.

The New York & New England Railroad, which reaches some of the rural famous summer resorts, has issued a seasonable little pamphlet telling all about the ways thither and the times and prices connected with each departure for any given point. People about to visit the Hudson River and Catskill Mountains should remember that the New York & New England Railroad is the only direct route from Boston.

Benjamin P. Cheeny, a Boston millionaire, waited many years for a beautiful widow to marry him, which she agreed to do when she had raised her daughter. The waiting became too deliberate, and he married the daughter, who loved him without conditions, and she made him a noble wife.

Some men claim that they don't care two straws about politics; but when it comes to mixed drinks they are mighty particular to have at least two straws and sound ones at that, too.

It isn't always the drowning man who grasps at a straw. Many a very dry man has been known to do it.

JOHN P FERNALD, ALBERT VITTUM,
Editors and Publishers.

NO LITTLE excitement was caused among the lock box holders at the Post office, on Saturday night and Monday, by finding in their respective boxes a copy of the following circular:

"I have received the following order from the First-Assistant Postmaster-General:—'You will at once notify all holders of boxes in your office that they must make a deposit of fifty (50) cents for each key held by them. Parties who neglect to make the deposit must not be permitted to use the boxes and their mail must be put in the general delivery.' Should you desire any information in regard to this demand, before complying with it, it will cheerfully be given by

Yours respectfully,
GEO. RANDALL, P. M."

As this requirement is being made all over the country, and is causing considerable controversy, it may prove of interest to see how the present trouble arose.

Section 295, chapter 7, of the Postal Laws and Regulations, reads, "Any postmaster in other than a building owned by the United States may erect boxes in his post office at his own expense. These boxes are neither owned nor repaired by the Department, but the revenues thereof must be reported quarterly to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department."

Section 296 reads, "Postmasters may allow box holders who desire to do so to provide lock boxes or lock drawers for their own use at their own expense, which boxes or drawers shall become the property of the United States and be subject to the direction and control of the Post Office Department, and shall pay a rental at least equal to that of other boxes in the same office."

The first of these two sections would certainly disprove, beyond any doubt, any claim of ownership in the lock boxes or their keys, by any other persons than the postmaster or the parties using them. The second seems to indicate that ownership passes to the Department, but, as we shall show further on, this can only mean that the boxes must be subject to the same control as other boxes, and that the fact of their users bearing the burden of their cost does not give such absolute ownership, that they could be demanded to the detriment of the office.

In December, 1882, the following ruling was made, which contradicts the permission given in Section 296: "Postmasters are not authorized to sell boxes, but must confine themselves to renting them at a fair price, requiring a deposit of fifty cents for the key to secure its return when given up." A little later a ruling was made that fifty cents should be required for each key.

In February, 1883, postmasters were ordered to report the sums deposited with them for keys. This occastioned a discussion, we are told. Postmasters were in doubt whether the order referred to deposits that should be made or that had been made, and letters were written inquiring, and complaining about the order, and an explanation was issued, the substance of which is that the demand was to protect the box holders.

April 18, 1883, a still more peremptory order was issued, which read so as to include all lock boxes rented. Postmaster Randall informs us that he has been in correspondence with the Department for some time in relation to the matter, and that the Department does not waive any claim on account of any arrangement made in the past.

The late Postmaster-General Howe, in his annual report, took strong grounds against the government sharing in the use of boxes. He said, among other things, "The partnership existing between the government and the postmaster in the use of boxes should be dissolved. Where the postmaster supplies the boxes and the government does not the latter should no more share in the proceeds of their rent than in the rent of any other property belonging to the postmaster." While he does not allude to deposits, it is evident from the tenor of his report that the deposit which is occasioning so much trouble would not have met his approval.—And, indeed, the whole matter has been urged since his decease.

From what we can learn we fail to see how the government can have any claim whatever upon property that it does not own. It can claim by law certain recompense for the performance, by its agents, of mail service, and of course is supreme in its direction of that service. But such requirements as this deposit we look upon as unjust and arbitrary. Especially do we fail to see how the Department can, with any degree of justice, make the claim upon box holders who have held their boxes for years. The whole matter looks to us like a thinly disguised attempt to get in a revenue to offset the anticipated falling off on account of the reduction in postage. We believe in cheap postage, but we do not believe the public desired to have it by making deficiencies by taking, as is contemplated, a liberal amount of the shortage out of lock box holders. Should all lock box holders accede to the demand there would be an immense revenue, to which the Department would have no moral, no just claim, and a very doubtful legal one.—The amount involved for any single individual is small, but we hope the matter will continue to be agitated, as we find it is in various places, until the Department shall see the weakness of the claim it makes. Of the lock box holders in this place two have made the deposit, but the rest demur, and sixty of them have signed a remonstrance which will be sent to the Postmaster-General.

THE REDUCTION in the appropriation for the police department, made last Spring, has not been conducive to the promotion of law and order in town, to the extent which respectable citizens could desire. We felt then that a mistake had been made,—made, too, under a misapprehension of facts which could have been set plainly before the meeting by the Chairman, or other members of our Selectmen. It would have been better if the appropriation had been increased instead of diminished.

We have no occasion to say anything uncomplimentary to the present force of police. It is not their fault that they are not omnipresent. It probably is not the fault of the gentleman who so strenuously advocated the reduction, that the quiet which reigns around his mansion is not the rule in other portions of the town. But it is a fact which is becoming fast apparent to the residents in the thickly settled portions of our town, that rowdyism, especially in the evenings and Sundays, is on the increase. We hear reports not from the Square, where loafers can always be found on every corner, and along the length of Main street, ready to insult any woman who is courageous enough to run the gauntlet, but from streets distant from the Square, where the insulting talk of hoodlums is a disgrace to any town. It ought to be said that the wives and daughters of our citizens can walk quietly on our streets in the early evening, at least, free from insult.

The narrow escape from fire which our town had on Sunday morning, also, is another reminder of the inadequacy of our police force for protection. That our town was saved a destructive fire through a prompt discovery of the incendiarism, is certainly to the credit of our night watch. But the same thing might be attempted again and be easily successful—not because the policemen are not watchful, but because they cannot be in all parts of the town at the same time.

In regard to the maintainance of order on Sundays and the enforcement of the Sunday law in regard to liquor sellers,—this is not the fault of the police, but of the town. It has been the occasion of some remark because the license of one dealer has been revoked for the illegal sale of intoxicants, while other larger and more influential rumsellers are allowed to sell freely on Sundays. There is reason for the remark, but no cause for blame to the present police force, as it would require constant watching and a larger force to obtain the necessary evidence to convict some of those dealers who do an enormous Sunday traffic, but whose spies are constantly on the lookout against detection. We have heard it argued, again, that our Selectmen might take for granted the vote in favor of a reduction in this department as signifying the desire on the part of our citizens that this law, as well as others, should not be enforced. Be this as it may, the town is certainly responsible for the state of things which now exists—for the rowdyism, lack of order, and non-enforcement of the Sunday law. It is not to our credit that this is allowed, and we hope to see the citizens who believe in good order vote next Spring for a large enough police force to secure its maintainance.

WE WERE greatly surprised at the information that Rev. Charles W. Park, who had been called from Mount Auburn to the Howard Avenue Congregational Church in New Haven, was refused ordination by the council. Mr. Park is a graduate of Amherst College, of the class of 1867. Wm. W. Wilkins, formerly of this town, was in this class, as was also Rev. Mr. Burnham, now of Boston Highlands. He is also a graduate of Andover, and a nephew of the Professor emeritus there. For ten years he has been a missionary to India, and his whole life work has been devoted to the cause of the Church which he loved.

Yet all these things went for naught with the council of fossils who were called to examine him. It is to the credit of eight of them that they voted in favor of his ordination. The cause of all this trouble was a belief on the part of Mr. Park in the possibility of future probation, and his disbelief in infant baptism as a saving ordinance.—If these views were entirely at variance with those which are held by many Congregational pastors, and if they affected in any way his Christian life or experience, we should not wonder at the action. But the former is the well known belief of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, as well as other preachers in good standing in the church, and we are surprised to know that the ordinance of baptism is regarded by any Congregational pastor as other than a symbolic observance. The fact is, Mr. Park was conscientious enough to state his true convictions on these points, which, though they may have differed little from the actual belief of others, were yet at variance with the printed creed of many antiquated Connecticut Churches. We learn that the Church over which he was called voted to install him, nevertheless, and the outcome of their decision will be regarded with interest.

THE SAD death, by drowning, at the Willows last week, reminds us that the advice of many physicians of prominence is being given on the danger of surf bathing. We believe these baths in a majority of cases are more harmful than otherwise. There is the liability of being carried away by the undertow on many coasts, or of a misstep beyond anticipated depth, which was doubtless the case in this instance, or of a sudden seizure by cramp. We know persons who are so weakened by a sea bath that they are unfit for any duties during the remainder of the day. And yet they think it must be taken. This is the height of folly. Such weakness is a sure indication that injury rather than helpfulness will result from these baths. There is a temptation to remain in the water a longer time than any one will allow is beneficial, and rheumatic affections and typhoid fevers are in many cases the indirect result. Such is the opinion fast being adopted by medical men. The safest plan for invalids, and healthy people, for that matter, is to let sea bathing severely alone.

W. B. Gifford & Co. of Lynn, call attention to their immense store and stock. This firm have one of the largest stores in Essex county. They are well known for fair dealing and liberal policy. Their important stock consists of wall papers, carpets, upholstery goods, dry goods, ladies' furnishing, ladies' garments, millinery, etc. They do a very large business and their patrons say they can save money at this emporium.

Our readers only need to be reminded that clam bakes are to be given at the Lafayette House every Thursday until further notice. Their attention is directed to Mr. Kelly's advertisement in another column. The menu at this house is well known—and Mr. Kelly's clam bakes are irresistible. That our readers will give him a call goes without saying.

One of our druggists sells liquor by the voting list. Any young man whose name is not on the voting list is taken as a minor and is refused liquor. Not a bad idea.—Waltham Record.

This would be a little rough on the fellow who hadn't paid his tax.

To-morrow the Empire State will leave Battery wharf for a sail Out To Sea, out of sight of land, for the first time. A glorious voyage. On Friday the North Shore trip will be taken, and Saturday, Provincetown. Moonlight excursions are taken every evening this week.

Balance of stock of rough and ready bonnets to close out at 9 cents each. Gents' turkey red handkerchiefs 3 cents each. Watch his bargain counter.

PEABODY.

Rev. Chas. B. Rice of Danvers preached at the So. Church last Sunday.

Dr. Alvin Story of Essex, has removed from Lynn to Boston, after a short stay in the former place.

Mr. Chas. Dodge has had a call as principal in a High School in Illinois, but is undecided as yet whether he will accept or not.

Mr. Edward Warren, employed at Brown & Stanley's, got the little finger of his left hand caught in a splitting machine, and had it so badly crushed, that it was amputated at the second joint by Dr. Pike.

Some evil disposed person or persons entered the house of Eben S. Poor estate on Tremont street, last Saturday night, and smashed some half dozen lights of glass and committed other nuisances about the place. A broken liquor bottle was found in the vicinity.

We have been shown a sample of what is called string peas, raised in the garden of Mr. Thomas J. Goodwin on Washington Place. When they are young and tender, they can be broken and eaten like string beans, and as they grow larger they can be shelled and are a very good pea.

An old woman, apparently demented, was found wandering around the fields in the rear of Highland Park last Sunday. She was unable to give her name, but called herself simply Margaret. She said she belonged in Salem, and was escorted to the street and started in that direction.

The largest cod fish ever exhibited in town was seen at Southwick's market yesterday, being four feet eleven inches and a half long and three feet one inch in circumference, weighing eighty-five pounds. It was caught about five miles off Swampscott by Capt. Norton of that place.

The hind wheels of a team belonging to Mrs. Ross, of Reading, which was standing in front of Pray's last Thursday evening, were struck by one of Marston & Company's express teams, springing the axle, but doing no further damage. Carelessness on the part of the driver was the cause.

To-morrow there will be a meeting of a committee of the different Grand Army Posts of Essex County at Lynn, to determine on the annual fall parade. Probably a short parade in Marblehead and a clam bake at the neck will be agreed upon. Comrades Randall, Ward and Batchelder represent Post 50.

The picnic of the Orthodox Sunday School at Centennial grove passed very pleasantly last Friday. The day was spent with sports and lounging about the woods. The music furnished by the Salem Cadet Band added to its attractiveness. The pleasures were slightly interrupted by the rain during the day.

Amherst Agricultural College has offerred 80 free scholarships to young men in the state, two from each Senatorial district. Senator Sparhawk of this district has appointed Daniel B. Hagar of Salem, W. B. Trefrey of Marblehead and Jas. N. Ham of this town, to examine the applicants from this district.

Mr. James T. Barnstead says he holds the police responsible for the property stolen from his house while under arrest recently. He claims he did not have time to lock the door before being taken to the lock up. The police should always carry a bunch of keys with them and lock the doors after their prisoners.

Engine No. 9 of the Eastern R. R. has been engaged in hauling gravel from the So. Peabody pit to distant points. She is now supplying the Chelsea Beach track and Newburyport, and will soon go further down the line. A good many acres have been dug by the steam shovel and work is not nearly completed.

Parties who take an affectionate leave of each other at the front door these evenings should see to it that the moonlight don't strike them while so doing. One couple on ——— street will be careful how they stand in fair Luna's light hereafter, as the remarks of a passer by one evening this week were more expressive than elegant.

By a recent act of Legislature no child under 10 years of age can be employed in any manufacturing, mechanical or mercantile establishment, and no child under 12 can be so employed during the hours in which the public schools are in session. Parents or guardians violating the law are subject to a fine of from $20 to $50, for the use of public schools.

As this is the season of the year when most people are annoyed almost to death with flies and insects of every description, it will not be considered as murder to use Dalmation Insect Powder, in order to clear your premises of their annoyance, which can be had for 40 cents a pound, at H. A. Spaulding's, No. 9 Allen's Block. Mr. S. is also sole agent for the great "Egyptian Disinfectant," which comes in powder and liquid form.

That the home paper is even better than a letter is believed in by one of our business men, having subscribed this week for the third copy this year to send to friends out of town, besides having the PRESS left at his own home. This is a very pleasant way of remembering a friend, and he receives a great deal more local news than could possibly be put in an epistle.

HOME HAPPENINGS.

One of the Buzzell Patent Morocco Buffing Machines is in operation at the establishment of Messrs. L. B. Southwick & Co., corner of Foster and Franklin streets. It is exceedingly simple and compact in its details, occupying but little space and requiring but little power to run it. The principal feature of the machine is a horizontal drum, revolving at the speed of 1200 revolutions a minute, the outer surface of which is covered with strips of No. 1 sand paper; this sand papered drum buffs the skin. Parallel to the buffing drum is a smaller friction drum, so regulated by a foot pedal as to approach or recede from the revolving drum at the will of the operator. A horizontal blower is connected to the machine, carrying away all dust. After a skin has been hand buffed, which simply removes the surplus flesh for a space of 8 or 10 inches down the center of the back, it is run through this machine, by placing it in contact with the rotary friction drum, and then pressing the friction drum and skin against the rapidly revolving sand papered drum, and the varying pressure scours off all hard and ragged imperfections, which the hand buffer cannot work to advantage. The machine can buff 60 dozen skins a day, and its application renders the skins of a much finer finish and quality. The machine as it now stands possesses great advantages over the primitive hand method of buffing, and it has almost become an adjunct to the art of sheep skin working, and its aid could hardly be dispensed with. Although the machine has been offered to the public for five years, only two have as yet found their way into Peabody, the one at the above mentioned firm, the other at the shop of Mr. Southwick on Lowell street.

We called into the new store of Samuel Trask yesterday, and found the genial proprietor and his clerks removing the goods from the old store and rearranging them in their new quarters. Where so many goods as are seen displayed in the store were put in the cramped quarters of Mr. Trasks' old store, is a mystery which we suppose he can fathom, but it is beyond us. The store is 50x30, has a good basement, where are kept the different kinds of oils sold by Mr. Trask. There is a large furnace which will be used in the winter to heat the entire store. Upon the ground floor, as we enter, we are at once impressed with the light and cheerful appearance. There are two counters, 20 and 16 feet in length, one on each side, with shelving and glass doors, for the reception of such articles as must be kept free from dust. In the rear of the store is an easy flight of stairs ascending to the office and a sort of balcony, where are kept garden tools, farming implements and such articles. The office is directly at the head of the stairs, and is light and cosy. Mr. Trask keeps everything in the way of hardware, nails, paints, oils, etc., and in his new quarters will be better able to serve his customers. The store is really a novel arrangement, the original design of which was made by Mr. Trask himself, and the plans of the finish were made by Edwin B. Balcom, to whom was entrusted their execution. The mason work was of course done by J. Arthur Trask, in his best manner, and the painting by B. F. Woodbury.

The following item will be of interest to many of our readers, as most of the parties interested were former residents here: The business of the Jarvis Furnace Company, and the New England agencies for the Korting injector, Armington & Sims Company's engines, Sheffield grate bars, and Schutte & Goering's jet instruments, will in the future be conducted by a stock company, organized under the State laws of Massachusetts, with a capital stock of $100,00 This company will do business under the name and style of the Jarvis Engineering Company. They will not only take charge of the old agencies, but they will do a general engineering and contracting business, in putting in steam for all kinds of manufacturing purposes. K. M. Jarvis, of Boston, will be president; A. F. Upton, Boston, treasurer and general manager. The directors will be K. M. Jarvis, A. F. Upton, L. B. Wright, Boston; H. A. Glasier, Springfield, Mass.; F. H. Pond, St. Louis, Mo.; J. A. Grant, Everett, Mass., secretary and clerk.

Artists' Materials, Winsor & Newton's Oil and Water Colors, Canvasses, brushes, &c. Also a full line of American, sable and bristle brushes at low prices. 15 per cent. discount to parties purchasing in quantities. Smith & Robinson, 42 Market street, Lynn.—Successors to S. A. Barton.

Rev. Mr. Hudson exchanged pulpits with Rev. Mr. Stewart of Lynn Sunday morning, Mr. Stewart returning the compliment at the Unitarian church in the afternoon.

SOUTH PEABODY.

Spring Pond is now in better condition than ever to deliver the purest and clearest of water to the inhabitants of Peabody. After the extensive and much needed improvements which are being effected under the supervision of the Water Board, at an outlay of $4000, it is certain that no more impure water can enter its aqueducts. The reservoir, considering its location and the quality of its water, is all that can be asked, and now that the prime difficulties have been obviated, we see no reason for further complaint. A large force of workmen are engaged in opening a canal, or basin, averaging twenty rods in width and nearly a quarter of a mile in length from dam to dam. The excavation of this basin has necessitated much severe labor, the ground being broken through the worst kind of a swamp, filled with an incredible number of stumps and interlacing roots, and the muck itself being wet and heavy to remove. But the work has advanced fairly, and it will near completion in the course of a few weeks, the result being a reservoir of goodly dimensions, crossed by four driveways, which will furnish support for the gates and a means of access to the neighboring property. The bed of the reservoir will be entirely free from sediment and no impure water can enter its outlet pipes. Commencing at the face wall dam across the lower end of Spring Pond, a trench has been dug and the earth removed from each side and carted to the banks, where solid levees have been constructed to withstand the action of the rising and falling water. The bottom has been carefully graded, all surplus alluvia being removed and dumped upon a road which is being constructed along the border of the basin. The workmen have finished the first dam and it now contains perhaps six feet of water. A gate excludes all water from the other three dams, and in these the workmen are engaged at present. The mud and roots, together with the stumps, present a curious sight as they lie on the banks at the edge of the wood whence they have been carted after having been removed from the bed of the trench. Several rocks obstruct the stream, but they will be broken up by blasting. Banks or levees are being built, and these will be perfected as soon as the bottom has been cleared and cleaned. The site of operations is that which was purchased more than thirty years since by the Salem Water Works, and the stumps now being removed belong to the trees cut by them. When they commenced to clear a way for their pipes and fountains the whole valley was overgrown by large cedars and a maze of tangled bushes. When the work which is now in progress has been completed we will have four large reservoirs, Spring Pond, Brown's Pond and the Fountain to draw from, and these will furnish an almost inexhaustible supply. Mr. H. N. Batchelder has charge of the work, and a large number of teams are under his control. The water is now higher than usual and bids fair to remain so. Our water supplies are all spring fed, and no town can boast of finer sources or a better supply system than Peabody, and we feel confident that not the slightest complaint can arise. It is also stated by competent and reliable persons that our system is one of the best in the state.

The funeral of Mr. Joseph O. Peabody took place from his late residence on Lynn street Friday afternoon. Mr. Peabody had been sick for many months, during which period the esteem in which he was held by a wide circle of friends manifested itself in many expressions of kindness. The deceased had those pleasing traits of character which naturally won friends, and his early death at the age of 30 years brought sadness to many hearts. The funeral was largely attended, indicating the respect in which he was held. The services, both at the house and at the grave, were conducted by Rev. J. W. Colwell. Hose 5, of which he was formerly a member, attended in a body, in uniform, also ex-members of the S. C. Bancroft Engine Co. There was was a beautiful floral pillow, with the letters "S. C. B." and "Hose 5" in immortelles, from the greenhouse of O. F. Newhall. There were other beautiful offerings of flowers. The uniform of the deceased was laid upon the foot of the casket. The flag at the Hose Station was at half-mast, and the doors were draped in mourning. Nearly all present followed the remains to the grave, where they were laid to rest with fitting services. With sad hearts the company slowly withdrew, leaving the beautiful grounds where repose so many of our dead. Mr. Peabody leaves a wife and one child, also parents, brothers and a sister, for whom there is the most sincere sympathy.

The old chapel building which was purchased by Daniel Haskell, has been fitted up by him for tenements, and is nearly ready for occupancy. There are three tenements, all of equal size, and arranged similar to each other.—There are three rooms on the first floor, the front one being 14 1-2x15 feet, and four chambers, besides two attic rooms—making nine in all, in each tenement. High service water is being put in for the convenience of the tenants, the piping and plumbing being done by D. B. Lord, Jr. The work of altering the chapel into its present condition was a laborious one; the old windows had to be entirely taken out, new ones put in, and the entire building remodeled.—The result makes a home for three families in a pleasant and growing portion of our town.

The muck removed from the excavations at Spring Pond will be used in Cedar Grove Cemetery for grading.

Complaint is being made about bathing in Spring Pond. Last summer a patrol was located there to prevent the nuisance in our water supplying ponds. Now there being no hindrance, parties from Lynn as well as Peabody bathe there, even sunning themselves upon the fountain sheds.

The Patent Steam Shovel used in loading gravel on the cars at Lynnfield broke down Monday, causing a suspension of work until needed repairs can be made.

Horace Scott, of the firm of Scott Brothers, was severely injured in the right eye recently at Raddin's Ledge, So. Peabody, by a flying wedge. It is hoped he will save the sight.

Two thousand two hundred and sixty-two through passengers were carried over the Lynn & Boston horse railroad Sunday, the largest number, in proportion to the number of cars run, of any Sunday's travel. There was no rushing, but a steady travel from early morning till late at night.

The Sabbath School of So. Peabody will hold its annual picnic at Brown's Grove, Friday.

Rev. C. C. Carpenter, of Mt. Vernon N. H., made a short call in town last week.

Nathaniel Putnam carried a large party of berry pickers to Ipswich, Tuesday.

Mr. John Putnam is getting along as well as could be expected.

During the past five weeks the horses of J. B. Newhall have been quite sick with the pink eye so that he has been unable to work them.

Wingate & Co., have been at work the past week finishing the vestibule of the church and putting up the steps on the front.

C. M. Merrow has moved into his house on County Street, recently purchased by him.

Neil Shaw conducted the services at the Alms house last Sabbath.

The funeral of Mrs. Ann B. Sanborn took place from the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. Daniel Twiss, on Lynn street, last Wednesday afternoon. Deceased was 72 years of age, and had been a suffering invalid for years.

Last Wednesday night a meteor of extraordinary size, or some strange heavenly body, passed across the northern sky, in a general direction from west to east, at about a quarter before 12 o'clock. It appeared at first considerably larger than one of the street electric lights, and its brightness was as intense. It moved with stately grandeur, apparently as if floating in an air current, so slow and steady was its progress. Its motion might well be compared with that of a large fire-balloon. As it passed along its course, its shape changed from a sphere to an elongated form, and it gradually diminished in size till it finally vanished from sight. Quite a number of persons witnessed it.

Daniel Goodwin, who recently came into possession of a large fortune, left him by his miserly father, has been leading a very dissipated life since that time. He had been around town for several days, until he was arrested by Officer Sweeney, last Saturday. He committed a number of strange freaks, such as playing ball with a gold watch, lighting a cigar with a five dollar bill, and finally at the time of his arrest, attempting to stop a freight train, by placing himself in front of it and then jumping from the track. Doctors Worcester and Pike examined him and he was sent to the Danvers Asylum.

A certain Railroad employe in town visited the barber shop of C. K. Mallard, last week, for the purpose of obobtaining a glass of ice water. Instead of going to the jar where drinking water is kept, he took a mug containing soap and went to the brass kettle upon an oil stove, and drew a full mug and proceeded to drink before he could be stopped by the proprietor. He was very angry and left the establishment before an explanation could be made.

The assessors are this year called upon to furnish to the state authorities a duplicate copy of the valuation of the town for 1883. The blanks for the same in the form of the large books used by the assessors, have already been received. This was formerly furnished once in five years, but now it is done once in three, and our share of the state tax is made from it. To copy this entire valuation record will be no small job for dog days.

PRESENT POWER.

TO-MORROW A LONG WAY OFF WHEN HELP IS WANTED TO-DAY.

Comfort is never in a hurry. Pain and distress are in hot haste. It is to the "friend in need"—the friend who does something now—that the old adage pays the compliment of being "a friend indeed." That they do not keep the sufferer in suspense is the salient excellence of BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS. The plasters of other days—whether porous or otherwise—said—"Wait until to-morrow: We can promise nothing on the spur of the moment." But pain unrelieved, like hope deferred, maketh the heart sick. Benson's plasters act on application. They permeate, soothe, warm and heal, containing, as they do, chemical and medicinal agents of the highest efficiency. Their motto is NOW, and the genuine have the word CAPCINE cut in the middle of each plaster. Price 25 cents. Seabury & Johnson, Chemists, New York.

Letter from Venezuela.

CARACAS, VENEZUELA, June 12, 1883.

How strange one seems when he enters a foreign place for the first time. Two or three weeks pass before one gets rid of the spirit of loneliness, and so it has been in my case. I sailed from New York on the 24th of May, the day of the opening of the Brooklyn Bridge. All the vessels in the harbor had their national flags flying from peak and mizzen; it was a superb sight. The steamer "Caracas," on which I took passage (pier 36, East River) had all her rigging covered with flags. We had a small brass cannon on board, which was fired off as we left the dock; when we passed under the Bridge a second shot was fired and all our flags were dipped three times, and after we passed the Bridge a third shot was fired. There was laying off Governor's Island a half dozen U. S. War vessels which returned our salute, and then we steamed off for the wide ocean.

I felt a heavy pang in my heart and tears stood in my eyes, when I saw the shores of North America fade from view where I had spent eight years of my life. I never thought that I should become so attached to a country, that was not my native land. We had splendid weather on the voyage and on the sixth day after leaving New York we arrived at Porto Rico and the Mono Islands and two days later we anchored in Puerto Cabello, surnamed "Il cimeterio dos Blancos," (graveyard of the whites). It is a small town of about 10,000 inhabitants, enveloped in a forest of cocoa palms. The country is very mountainous, clad in a dense and rich vegetation. We lay here only one day and the next morning arrived at La Guayra, the end of the trip. La Guayra is the seaport of Caracas, which is eleven miles distant, and it takes a whole day to make the journey. La Guayra is a small town similar to Puerto Cabello, and what you see here chiefly is Indians, negroes, donkeys and cocoa palms. I landed here at seven o'clock in the morning and by nine o'clock was all right, with my luggage in the Custom House, after which I took the coach for Caracas, and it took eight hours to reach that place. The scenery along the road is very beautiful.

After leaving La Guayra the first place you reach is Maiquetia, a lovely little town, surrounded by a forest of cocoa, Royal and Morichi palms. Leaving here you begin to ascend the mountains, and the road is very steep and dangerous, running alongside of precipices, the bottoms of which are scarcely distinguishable. After a six hours' ride you reach an elevation of 5000 feet, and to tell the truth I never saw a grander sight than the one spread out before me here. I have seen the Mantiqueira and Vertente in Brazil, the Alps in Europe, and the Alleganeys in the States, but they cannot compare in wildness with this part of Venezuela. The reason is, that it is so frequently disturbed by earthquakes. The vegetation is very luxuriant, especially in the steep valleys, where it is very brilliant. We now begin to descend the mountain again, and coming into a beautiful valley at an elevation of 3,100 feet enter the city of Caracas, around which are mountains some of them 10,000 feet in altitude. Caracas contains about 70,000 inhabitants and is the Capital of Venezuela, and has some magnificent parks and very nice public buildings. The houses are all built one story high only, on account of the earthquakes which are very frequent here. The population is very mixed, and comprises Americans, English, French, Germans, Italians, Spaniards, in fact, nearly all nations are here represented; the climate is delightful, and the heat is not oppressive, like La Guayra, when the thermometer reaches 80 degrees in the shade it is considered very warm. I can compare the climate to nothing better than a perpetual spring, and the weather is uniform all the year round. The highest temperature is 80 degrees and never below 60 degrees. The native population, Metes, half white and half Indian, are very kind and courteous to strangers, and their women are very beautiful.

Next month we are to have here a National Exposition on the anniversary of the centennary of Bolivar, and I am already at work on colored moroccos to be put on exhibition at the Exposition. I will send you a more detailed account of the country and people hereafter, but believe me, that, while so far away, I still sometimes wander in spirit in and around Peabody. *

MOTHER'S SPINNING WHEEL.

CONCERNING ONE ARTICLE THAT WAS NOT FOR SALE, AND ANOTHER WHICH IS CHEAP AT ANY PRICE.

"No, sir, I wouldn't sell you that for any money; that spinning-wheel was my mother's. It was one day, when she was singing like a lark and making this old wheel hum, that my father, then a young medical student, afterwards a farmer, fell in love with her—some fifty years ago."

So spoke the proprietor of a rough bit of farm land in Ulster County, N. Y., to a relic-hunter, and "mother's" spinning-wheel remained among her children and grandchildren.

"My mother," writes Rev. J. W. Phelps, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. Church, Chicago, has used PARKER'S GINGER TONIC, and wishes me to say that she has found it more effective than anything she ever used for invigorating and strengthening the system debilitated by malaria. She desires me also especially to mention the certainty with which it aids digestion and overcomes exhaustion."

Ever since the first household was established "mother's" opinion has been more potent in this world than that of judge, jurist or physician. Her hand has always cooled the fever and her voice has been filled with hope. With each day's decline, PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is becoming more deservedly popular with the women who guard alike husband and children. It eradicates malarial poison from the blood, from which there is now such wide-spread suffering.

Please observe: DR. PARKER'S GINGER TONIC is not an essence of ginger. It is a combination of several ingredients, of which none singly can produce anything like its effect. For Kidney, Stomach and Liver troubles, it is the standard and unfailing remedy. In two sizes; 50 cents and $1. The latter the cheaper. Hiscox & Co., Chemists, New York.

Mrs. Frank Leslie, the indefatigable publisher, denies the report of her approaching marriage, emphatically. "Not to any duke, count or king just at present," she adds. "Why should I marry? I am making more money than I know what to do with. My newspaper and magazines, which the lawyers told me would produce nothing are bringing me in an income of $150,000 a year, and when a woman can make money like that, does she want to tie herself to a man only to help her squander it?" Mrs. Leslie shortly goes to Europe on business relating to her publishing house.

HAY FEVER.—I was severely afflicted for eleven years with Hay Fever, after trying almost everything without avail, I gave up all hopes of being cured, when I purchased a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm. To my surprise, after a few applications, I was entirely relieved. R. Watson Harris, Letter Carrier, Newark, N. J.

I recommend to those suffering (as I have) with Hay Fever, Ely's Cream Balm. I have tried nearly all the remedies, and give this a decided preference over them all. It has given me immediate relief. C. T. Stephens, Hardware merchant, Ithaca, N. Y. Price 50 cents.

A Boston firm conduct all of their correspondence by means of a typewriter. They had occasion to send four or five letters to a customer out in Berkshire county and they were amused a few days ago to receive one from him closing with these words: "You need not print any more letters you send me, for I want you to understand that I can read writing."

A VEXED CLERGYMAN.

Even the patience of Job would become exhausted were he a preacher and endeavoring to interest his audience while they were keeping up an incessant coughing making it impossible for him to be heard. Yet, how very easy can all this be avoided by simply using Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. Trial Bottles given away at Hazen A. Spaulding's Drug Store.

It is said that a young lady can never whistle in the presence of her lover. The reason is obvious. He does'nt give her the chance. When she gets her lips in a proper position for whistling something else always occurs. —Rochester Post Express.

IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—To those who have used Swedish Remedies, they know full well the value of them. To those who from prejudice have not used them, we can say that they are the very best Medicines for the diseases for which they are recommended. Swedish Lung Balsam cures Coughs, Colds and all diseases of the Lungs. When taken together with Swedish Botanic Compound (the great blood purifier), it will cure Consumption in the first and second stages.

The new and elegant drawing-room car, Pilgrim, which has just been put upon the train boat of the Fall River Line, is receiving no little praise, both from those who are privileged to ride in it and from all who have the pleasure of even inspecting it.

Damonia, the new remedy advertised in our columns, is a magnetic mineral earth lately discovered in Texas, which a careful analysis of our most prominent chemists declares to contain the most potent medical ingredients. A trial is recommended.

"Clothe me in dreams" is what a young lady writes in a poem. This might do for a night-dress such weather as this, but the young lady would look rather queer in such a costume on the streets.

If you feel "all run down" and overcome with the heat, try a bottle of Morse's Yellow Dock. It is the best summer tonic and blood purifier ever offered to the public.

A New Haven man, lacking faith in the savings banks, "deposited" in the baby's cradle $300 which he had accumulated. A German servant girl "drew" the amount and disappeared.

"IT'S A GOOD THING

AND I KNOW IT," WERE THE WORDS OF MR. LEVI PORTER, THE CELEBRATED FASHIONABLE CUTTER TO THE FIRM OF NATHAN & TAYLOR, UNDER THE NARRAGANSETT HOUSE, PROVIDENCE, R. I.—SHOWS WHAT AN HONEST THING WILL DO.

"It's a good thing; I know it's a good thing." Such were the words addressed to your reporter when he called at the fashionable establishment of Nathan & Taylor, under the Narragansett House, Providence, R. I. The speaker was Mr. Leroy Porter, head manager of the tailoring department of this large clothing house, as he was cutting his way through a mammoth pile of brocades, Scotch plaids and broadcloths.

"I felt sometimes as if there was a cannon ball resting on my stomach. I would have to get up at night, for I was so short of breath. You see in the Spring—our busy season—we are at work sixteen hours per day. Have short times for meals, and at irregular hours. My stomach became very much disordered, and I was all out of health, I tried every kind of medicines. The doctors said it was a touch of dyspepsia. I could get nothing to do me permanent good until a friend recommended Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY. I know it's a good medicine. It has completely cured me of stomach disorders and indigestion. It seems to be a thorough cleanser of the system from biliousness or anything of that kind. I know this for I've tried it. I'm in the best of health now, but should I ever have a dyspeptic turn again Dr. Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY would be my source of relief. Dr Kennedy's FAVORITE REMEDY acts upon the digestive organs in a charming manner, regulating their action, strengthening and purifying the whole system."

Book Notices.

KING'S DICTIONARY OF BOSTON, by Bacon, a recent publication, is unlike King's Hand-books of Boston and Boston Harbor, and covers a larger and more exhaustive field of information. It is a book of over 500 pages, that express years of study and research, as well as a clear and concise manner of putting things. It treats of everything that bears any importance or has any significance in the past or present history and condition of the heart of New England; her commerce, trade, religious beliefs, educational interests, art, amusements, public buildings and institutions charitable, in short, the whole book is full of as entertaining reading as one could wish; its style is easy and mostly narrative. It is also accompanied by an excellent map of the city that must serve as a valuable guide to any one visiting from abroad; the whole is sold for 50 cents paper, 75 cents flexible, and $1.00 cloth. Moses King, publisher, Harvard square, Cambridge, Mass.

BALLOU'S MAGAZINE for August has a long chapter of "The Belle of Australia," by William H. Thomes, author of "A Slaver's Adventures" and "Life in the East Indies." The hero of the story has reached the gold-fields of Ballarat, and purchased a gold-mine, only to find that he has been sold as well as the mine by three unprincipled, piratical scamps, who make a living by swindling tender-feeted new comers. This is the best romance the author ever wrote. Besides "The Belle," Ballou has a large number of good things, all suited for the season. Just send ten cents for a specimen copy. Only $1.50 per annum, or 15 cents a single copy. Address Thomes & Talbot, 23 Hawley Street, Boston.

The August number of DEMOREST'S MONTHLY MAGAZINE repays perusal, the articles being well written and of an interesting nature. "Agathe De Valsuze" is the commencement of an admirable story. "Out of the World" concludes pleasantly; and the shorter stories are all excellent. Jenny June continues her interesting articles "How We Live in New York;" Hetta Ward contributes "Home Art and Home Comfort." We know of no publication better suited for the household than Demorest's Monthly, and the August number fully justifies the reputation it has acquired as a good family magazine.

The Musical Herald for July has a quarter of a hundred reading articles of interest and value and four pieces of music, the latter being "My Friend," music by Queen Marie Antoinette, adaptation by Louis C. Elson; "Pray for the Peace," by Vincent Novello; "Benedictus," by Gounod; and "Tarentelle Mignonne," by L. Streabbog. This excellent monthly is published at Boston, and costs $1.50 a year or 15 cents a number.

The Vermont newspaper men's association have passed the following:—

Whereas, The demands of the foreign advertisers for special positions, such as the head of column, next to reading matter, etc.; also the placing of advertising matter in reading columns, has become an annoyance to the publishers and a wrong to local advertisers; therefore

Resolved, That we recommend to newspaper publishers of the state to decline all such contracts and to insert at their published advertising rates—no special position given and no advertisements in reading columns.

"Did you hear my lecture last evening?" inquired an artist of a milkman who was suspected of adulterating the lacteal fluid which he sold. "No; I couldn't get around." "I'm sorry, because it was something of vital importance to you, and I'm sure you would have enjoyed it." "Ah!" said the interested pint and quart tosser; "what was the subject of your lecture?" "Chalk talk," replied the picture drawer. The milk drawer turned pale and skimmed away.—The New York Dairy.

Humor is a curious thing, and its popularity is astonishing. It is a fact that Josh Billings cannot spell correctly, or could not when he first began writing for the newspapers, and Peck's bad boy's author writes such wretched grammar that it must necessarily be patched up before being printed. Bob Burdette and Mark Twain are the only humorists who write good English, and neither are college graduates. People who enjoy a good laugh seldom grumble about grammar.

A lady mentioned, in conversation recently, seeing a cherry colored cat while out riding. Her hearers expressed their surprise and various comments and speculations were indulged in as to the cause of the curious color of the feline, when one of the company said she guessed the cat must have been the color of black cherries, which on inquiry proved to be the case, and the narrator greatly enjoyed the laugh which followed the explanation of the phenomenon.

"We have a call bell in our private office," says an editor. "It is used to call one of our boys with. At least that is the popular legend connected with the article. When we want one of our boys we ring the bell, and then go out in the back office and hunt him up and tell him of the fact. It always pleases him to learn that we have been ringing."

Much has been said about the attack upon the study of Greek recently made by Charles Francis Adams, Jr. But one side of the case has not been noticed by Mr. Adams, his friends, or his critics. It makes much difference how Greek is studied. It is one thing if the professor is a juiceless old fossil who does not care how horrid English is used in translations, provided the scholar can tell all about the digamma, has the rules for the subjunctive mood at his tongue's end, and goes no deeper into the study than to parse all the hard words. It is another thing if the instructor is an enthusiast in the science of teaching as well as in the language itself, if every recitation is a study in English as well as Greek, if every translation is required to be correctly worded, if the English language is studied to find terse, apt expressions to fittest convey the delicate shades of meaning of the original, if the derivation of modern words is traced back to the primeval Greek and changes of significance studied, etc. Mr. Adams made some good points, but we think they are more against the way the average college professor or tutor teaches Greek, than against the language itself. And we have strong personal reasons for the other belief.—Southbridge Journal.

The coffee house experiment in Boston is only sixteen months old, but has reached a profit of $1,000 a month. The capital was furnished by benevolent men, who looked for no pecuniary return. The Casino coffee house was opened in February, 1882, and occupied the whole building. Plate-glass windows, hard-wood finish, decorated walls and tasteful furnishings served to remove any impression of cheap charity. There were two entrances, one, for women, opening directly into the drawing rooms, and the other, for men, to a "coffee bar," where coffee, cocoa, sandwiches and simple refreshments were sold, and in the rear were billiard and pool tables, with chairs for persons watching the game. Cigars were sold at the coffee counter, and smoking was allowed. Overhead was a reading room and an apartment fitted up with tables for games. The idea was to provide all the social attractions of the saloons, with the exception of intoxicating drinks. A new coffee house was soon projected, the Alhambra, which is even more attractive in its decorations than the Casino, and equally succesful.

A St. Louis girl's foot was sprained by a tight shoe, and resultant blood poisoning killed her. Why, a girl right here in town discovered a hole in her fancy stocking, just above her shoe, one afternoon on the street, and had the worst attact of blood poisoning you ever heard of. A man from out of town was badly attacked one day this week. On finding he couldn't (?) get anything to take in town, he actually took a drink of water, and the shock was so great that blood poisoning set in and it is doubtful if he ever recovers. A lady here is just recovering from a bad case of blood poisoning caused by finding a full quart of strawberries in a box at the beginning of the season. People cannot be too careful how they fool around with this disease.

PEABODY.

Mr. M. A. McGelligott has recently painted a large plaster paris figure for "Billy" Hayes.

Picture Frames for Engravings and Oil Paintings made to order. We have also on hand a fine assortment of Engravings at Low Prices. Smith & Robinson, 42 Market street, Lynn, Successors to S. A. Barton.

Our readers who desire anything in the way of building or designing, will note the card of Edwin B. Balcom in this issue. Mr. Balcom has already done several jobs in town which have been much to his credit, and he has given evidence that he thoroughly understands his business.

At the one hundred and fifteenth Annual Commencement of Brown University, Mr. William E. Simonds, formerly of this town, delivered an oration entitled, "Homines Novi." He was one of twelve who delivered orations, while fourteen others who were appointed to speak were excused. He received the degree of Bachelor of Arts.

Mr. Henry P. Dorsett, the well known and popular clerk at Bushby & Co's store, was united in marriage, yesterday noon, to Miss Annie D. Smith, daughter of the late William Smith, Rev. J. W. Hudson officiating. The happy couple immediately left for a trip through Maine. They will visit the White Mountains before their return. They will reside on Washington street, in the new house of Mr. O'Connor.

We regret to learn that it is probable that Miss Ellen R. Little will not return to Peabody as second assistant of the High School. She has had an offer of a better position as assistant in the High School in Lewiston, Maine, her own home, and will doubtless accept. Miss Little was a scholar of marked ability, and many original ideas, of which we were in hopes the scholars of this school were to have the benefit.

It is really expected by the members of the fire department that there will be a full parade of the "boys" sometime in September. At a union meeting of Committees from the different companies, held recently, it was voted that such a parade be held, provided the necessary funds could be raised. About three hundred dollars will be necessary, and subscription papers, we are informed, are already in circulation.

Miss Jennie Gushee, a domestic, while alighting from a horse car, last Friday, near Pierpont street, lost her pocketbook containing nearly twenty dollars. It was found shortly afterwards by a gentleman, who learned from the contents to whom it belonged and restored it to the owner. Miss Gushee offered to reward him, but he declined to accept. She gave him her sincere thanks, and seemed to appreciate the kindness.

The excursion of the Empire State from Salem, on Tuesday of next week, is an event in the pleasure line which the public ought not to overlook. This is the largest steamer that goes into our bay, and she is splendidly officered and equipped. This will be a complimentary excursion tendered by the Salem Light Infantry to their lady friends.—The steamer will leave Pennsylvania Pier at 9 in the morning and return at 7 in the evening. The trip will be along the South Shore to Provincetown, and the tickets will be only one dollar. The steamer's band will furnish music and there will be dancing. It is expected that a number from this town will participate, and tickets can be obtained of any of the committee, who are advertised in another column, or at Starr C. Hewitt's.

A bold attempt was made last Sunday morning to burn a large amount of property in this town and but for the prompt and efficient action of our night watch, the result would have been very serious. About quarter past one o'clock, Officers Sweeney and Skinner saw a light in the old freight house, and upon investigation, it was found that an entrance had been effected through the repair shop of Mr. James Fallon, and a lot of grease belonging to Mr. Elbridge Rust, set on fire. They immediately rolled out the grease and put out the blaze. Mr. Rust had no insurance on the grease and had been notified by the railroad company that it was there at his risk. Some time later as the officers, in company with officers Jones and Barnaby were returning after notifying Mr. Fallon to lock up his place, they discovered the hay barn of Mr. Ira Foster on the line of the E. R. R., to be on fire; they hastened to the place and found that it had been set in one corner and had gained considerable head-way, but with weeds and wet tan they succeeded in putting it out. Mr. Foster had some $600 worth of hay, which had been put into the building only a few days before, and on which there was no insurance. While the officers were still at the fire of Mr. Foster's, the light of another was seen in the sheds, in the rear of Norton & Gilman and C. H. Goulding's on Walnut street. This proved to be a quantity of hay in a barrel, and was extinguished, making the third fire inside of an hour, either one of which had it got under way would have proven very disastrous. Our night watch are to be commended for their prompt and efficient action.

Adelbert E. Cady, agent for the People's Cyclopedia, is in town canvassing for the work. It contains 58,000 topics, 52 double-page colored maps, 100 smaller maps and over 5000 engravings. It is emphatically a Cyclopedia for the people--embracing all the essential parts of all others, and is a revision and correction of their errors. It is printed from type made expressly for it—perfectly clear,—and makes three large super royal octavo volumes. Those of our readers who have either Johnson's, Appleton's, Chamber's or the Brittanica, will do well to examine this work, because it furnishes far more information in less words and is brought down to the present time. The agent will take pleasure in showing the work to any one who desires to see it, either at their office or residence, whether they desire to purchase or not. Direct a postal to Mr. Cady, giving residence and stating what hour it will be convenient to see the Greatest Work of the day.

The amount of travel on the open horse cars these summer evenings is astonishing. Indeed, they are often so crowded as to defeat the very purpose for which many have entered them, that of having a cool and delightful ride amid the beautiful surroundings of this favored locality. It is astonishing how much pleasure a poor man can get for a few cents when the cars are not crowded. The numbers who find their daily recreation in this wise are rapidly increasing. When next year President Breed and his associates, in the pursuance of their progressive policy, shall extend the lower Swampscott track around the shore to Marblehead, giving one of the most beautiful and picturesque rides along the New England coast, and affording access to that quaint old town, at a cost of only a few cents; and continuing the Peabody branch to Danvers, they will find their enterprise rewarded by even richer returns than their previous ventures.—The ride from Boston to Marblehead will be unequalled by any horse car trip in this country.—Lynn Union.

The Postmaster General advises the public that in sending newspapers, books, pamphlets and other articles by mail to foreign countries or to points within the United States, the address should always be placed on the wrappers, as well as on the articles inclosed, so that should the wrappers become detached, through friction and movement incident to mail transportation, it will be still possible to deliver the articles without the wrappers.

Some idea of the bargains in gloves, mitts and lace goods can be got by reading the advertisement of David Conrad, but a visit to his Pavilion is necessary to fully comprehend them. Mr. Conrad always keeps up with the times; old goods are always got rid of at some price, and his stock looks clean and fresh at all times. It is a pleasure to trade at such an establishment.

We advise our readers to look in at the store of W. F. Goldsmith & Co. the next time they are on Union street, Lynn, and see the variety of styles and patterns which they display in the carpet line. Their establishment is immense and they will be pleased to give particular attention to customers from Peabody. They also keep window shades of all kinds for both stores and dwellings.

The Madison-square Theatre's travelling season will begin early in September, when eight companies will be sent on the road. Three of these will play "Esmeralda," and a like number will present "Young Mrs. Winthrop." There will be one "Hazel Kirke" company, and one company playing "The Rajah."

A legal point claims the attention of New Haven merchants. Two have been chalking on the side walk large pictures of trade dollars, etc., and complaint has been made to the city authorities, who ordered them to desist. One merchant named Frank, proposes to test his legal right to embellish the sidewalk in front of his store.

Chas. A. Ropes & Son, Central St., Salem, always quote the very lowest prices on flour, meal and grain. They are also a very reliable firm to deal with.

Peabody's summer bargains are always remembered by our readers, and we take pleasure in reminding them of his new advertisement.

Dartmouth College has conferred the degree of Doctor of Music on Gen. Henry K. Oliver of Salem.

Wellman Osborne of Lynn has a new advertisement this week. Read and profit.

Some time last Thursday evening burglars entered the store of H. M. Osborne on Central Street, and appropriated a quantity of cigars and tobacco and about a dollar in change that was in the drawer. Entrance was effected by breaking a pane of glass in the front window. It was probably the work of amateurs.

A farmer named Felton, started up Lowell street yesterday morning with a horse rake fastened behind his wagon. When near the engine house it became detached, and the farmer continued on his way unconscious of his loss until reminded by a gentleman in a buggy when he was up to Mr. W. L. Pray's house. He returned and got it.

Poet's Corner.

An Answered Prayer.

A lovely woman sadly sighed—
A mother hungry and hollow-eyed—
And a tear-drop glistened on her cheek,
As she thought of her children, thin and weak,
Who, left without a father's care,
Lay dreaming of warmth and comfort there.

Her patient needle had supplied
Their wants since their poor father died;
But sickness, with its scathing breath,
Had marked her cheek with the hue of death,
And her wasted form refused to bear
The burden of a widow's care.

And so to-night her prayer arose,
To Him who soothes the orphan's woes—
This pitiful and earnest plea;
"Oh, God of mercy, pity me!
And for my hungry darlings' sake
Send succor, or my heart will break!"

Just then a gentle rap was heard,
And the widow's heart with joy was stirred
As an errand-boy with meat and bread,
Came softly in and kindly said,
"To No. 10 these goods were sent,"
Then bowing, to the street he went.

The widow in a chair sank down,
And wondered who, in all the town,
Should understand her dire distress,
And help her in her helplessness.
But while she sat there, at the door
The errand-boy appeared once more.

And said, with pity in his tones,
"Those goods were sent to Deacon Jones
Good-night." The widow bowed her head
To hide her bitter tears, and said:
"'Tis well my darlings did not wake—
Poor souls, their little hearts would break!"

The deacon, sleeping in his chair,
Dreamed that a widow, bowed with care,
Knelt at his feet and asked for bread,
That her poor orphans might be fed.
Just here the door-bell's ringing din
Awoke him, and the boy came in.

"These goods, sir," said he, "were delayed,
Through no one's fault but mine. I made
A blunder which I can't explain,
And one which cost a widow pain;
I left them at her home and then Went back and took them off again."

"Here, take them back!" the deacon cried,
"My dream has taught me to divide
My portion with the needy poor—
Go, leave them at the widow's door;
And say 'twas God who sent them there—
It was his way to answer prayer."

Room at the Top.

Never you mind the crowd, lad,
Or fancy your life wont tell;
The work is the work for a' that,
To him that doeth it well.
Fancy the work a hill, lad;
Look where the millions stop;
You'll find the crowd at the base, lad;
There's always room at the top.

Courage and faith and patience,
There's space in the old world yet;
The better the chance you stand, lad,
The further along you get.
Keep your eye on the goal, lad,
Never despair or drop;
Be sure that your path leads upward;
There's always room at the top.

BERNARD LARKIN'S NICHE.

BY MRS. M. O. STEVENS.

"Just in the niche
He was ordained to fill."
—Cowper.

CHAP. I.

Fortune, fickle jade! was using Bernard Larkin badly. He had served in the Union army during three years of the civil war, and had come home at last with a crippled right arm. During the succeeding two years a chain of misfortunes had befallen him, each one seeming greater than the last, so that now he felt like comparing himself to a dismantled ship left afloat upon the waters in momentary danger of sinking.

His business, which in the spring had promised well, was a failure, and he in his heart knew that it was because of the double-dealing of his brother-in-law, although he was unable to prove it. His mother, whom he had loved and depended upon with unusual filial affection, had been sick for many months, and he had found it necessary to exert considerable self-denial to keep her surrounded, through the long and tedious illness, with all the attentions which she needed. The farm which had been his boyhood's home, and which he supposed was his mother's possession by gift of her brother, on her death was legally claimed by another. And, last of all, the girl to whom he had given his love had deserted him for a more prosperous lover. With the realization of this last misfortune came a determination to leave Elmwood without delay. In a few hours his every arrangement was made, and he was speeding west with no definite aim but that of winning his bread. The Great West was to him the land of promise, plenty and success. His money was but little; he did not realize how little, nor how soon it would be spent, as tarrying in one large city after another he sought and failed to find any toil that suited his whim or capacity. Everywhere he found many on the same errand preceding him. And so he went out through the country to Omaha, doing a day or two's labor at whatever turned up, but always finding hosts of unemployed men that seemed better adapted for the rough life that he encountered, and who cared less for "the flesh pots" of a civilized community.

He found the West different from what he had expected. Always more laborers than labor, and nowheres much of the tidy, thrifty habits of New England to which he clung by nature and custom. When he reached Omaha he shrank from the struggle with ignorance, and remembered many a chance, that he had passed on his road desirous of grasping something better, that appeared to him now the ultimatum of all his hopes, and so he determined to retrace his steps into Illinois, perhaps Ohio.

His money was very nearly gone and in one way and another his wardrobe had suffered depletion, until little more than what he stood in remained. A still further sacrifice seemed necessary, and so his overcoat was left in Omaha, and he discovered that the human frame was capable of enduring a vast deal of cold without sinking.

Down to St. Louis he went where he worked for awhile in a bakeshop, but sickness came upon him and when he was recovered, his place there was filled and he found no other. Happening upon a man who was bound down the river in pursuit of a promised job, upon the levees at Memphis, he was persuaded to accompany him. When there his disability prevented his performing that labor and no other offered, so he turned sick at heart and worn in body, a common tramp, to go — anywhere.

Up the eastern bank of the Mississippi he strolled, accepting food as it was offered, sleeping in the woods, or in some friendly hay or corn-stack, sometimes in a rude bed, that some kindly hands would make ready for him; toiling at any little odd job that he could find to do, for he was handy in his way, and possessed a fund of New England notions and maxims, that do not work ill among Western toilers. Still he did not find the occupation which he sought or the fortune that he hoped lay in store for him. He was fast sinking to the level of the vagabond life that he was leading. It seemed to have charms for him since he had got used to begging a breakfast or supper, as he needed, and in return arranging some wonderful toy or puzzle for the children, or telling with simple eloquence to older ears some tale of the east or stirring experiences of his army life.

He had come to be ragged, and was oft-times very dirty so that he marvelled as he plodded over the pike-roads, through the woods, or on the banks of some swiftly flowing river, if it was really Bernard Larkin's body with which he journeyed. Bernard Larkin had never while in the army during his hardest marches, or most severe engagements, been as filthy and ragged, or worn his soiled rags, and accepted his scanty food with so contented and careless a spirit.

Had he suffered a transition? He thought of the past; his bright hopes, all vanished; his proud purposes, all broken; and his love which had been so deep and absorbing, now become an idle dream; but it was reviewed in the torpid manner that he might have thought over an acquaintance's story.

Was he to live this life always, he sometimes asked himself? and answered it with sleepy mentality in an indifferent "I don't know." He had asked this question oftener of late, as entering the state of Illinois he frequently came upon tramps like himself, some almost duplicates in their good natured indifference, others vile and wicked, that he turned from with a shudder and a dim realization that by leading a similar life he was their peer.

For many miles now he had not asked for labor. He had forgotten that he had ever desired any, and was drifting along like a dirty paper, at the mercy of the wind. Near a goodly sized town, after stopping all night in a corn-stack, he tarried at a farm house door and begged something to eat. A middle aged woman of stirring manner looked at him from head to foot, searchingly, and bade him come in, as she let no one go hungry from her door if she knew it. While eating the simple food that she brought out, he was somewhat annoyed by her searching glances as she remarked about the weather and the roads.

His name and previous place of residence being given her, she remarked brusquely, "I thought so, you look like your mother."

The astonishment in his face she understood as a question, and immediately proceeded to inform him, that in her younger days she had been a servant in his mother's family, had many times carried him in her arms, and during the few hours that he remained in her humble log house, she related anecdotes and incidents so numerous and characteristic that he was again a boy by his mother's side, receiving her teachings in virtue and probity, beholding her efforts to give him the education and advantages that should make his manhood rich with promise, and sharing with her in an endeavour to show those poorer and weaker than themselves, that no lot so humble but had some chance for usefulness. His mother had not been so real to him, in all the months that had elapsed since she grew weak and peevish during her long and painful illness.

He began to feel a sense of shame in this new acquaintance's company, and declining with rude haste her invitation to stop awhile, he hurried away to be alone with his own thoughts and newly aroused sensibilities. A period of depression came upon him and for many days he hung around in the vicinity of the woman's house as if a spell bound him. But the authorities became suspicious of the idle vagabond and bade him journey on—anywhere—out of their way.

Again he took up his pitiful tramp, but he was dispirited and moody. He found fewer kindnesses on his way now. People seemed to shun or turn carelessly from him, for added to his filth and rags was a manner that repelled and apparently dreaded notice. A few miles walk fatigued him now, and he lay more hours and more heedlessly in whatever friendly nook gave him shelter. He longed with a mournful greed to be once again in his neat comfortable bed and see his mother bustling around and caring for him. That desire became his haven of rest, his heaven, and he looked at the few homes that he passed and wondered if they contained any woman as pure, as noble and as gentle as his mother.

It was spring now and no longer did the bitter cold and inclement storm beat upon and incommode him. Still the beautiful weather had no charm for him. He no longer reveled in the wealth of leaving branch and budding blossom. The feathered songsters could no more call a flush of pleasure to his face, or the murmuring brooks and flowing rivers with their green banks and tempting finny tenants draw more than a passing glance from him. Once was the time that these attractions of our beautiful earth awoke in his breast all the ecstasy of a true lover of nature.

It had been stormy for a couple of days but having cleared up towards night he dragged himself along, wet to the skin, and splashed even to his face with mud, pondering as to where he should sleep the coming night.

The valley into which he had entered extending away with miles of luxuriant beauty and promise would have touched the heart of an anchorite.

Divided in nearly equal parts by a swiftly flowing stream over which a couple of bridges gave passage from a little colony of houses and barns on one bank, to a mill, workshops, and storehouses on the other, and circling around these, promising gardens, orchards with blossoming trees, and well arranged vineyards and fields, it told a tale of artistic taste and forehandedness on the part of the proprietors.

One house much larger and more pretending than the others, sat nearest the embryotic avenue over which Bernard was strolling. Tarrying near the house door a couple of boys of some ten or twelve years were attracted by his forlorn appearance and hastened to him, offering with childlike generosity, hospitality. Hurrying into the house they returned with bread, cake and milk which he permitted them to place on the grass by his side. Unsuccessful in their attempt to draw him into conversation and grieved by his indifference to their proffered kindness, the children slunk away and left him to his own companionship. Rising up after a few moments he strode on by the front of the house, but paused near its farther corner attracted by a lilac bush, whose wealth of bloom and pungent fragrance called to mind a similar one in his old home.

Standing there, an open window was before him, and through the waving folds of its muslin curtain he saw the white billows of a tempting bed. If he could only lay his weary limbs down there. He had fainted twice that day, and for the past two hours had been bearing up against a syncopal disposition to lie down anywhere and have no heed for the end.

But that soft, white bed; the counterpart with its rounded surface and slightly canted pillows to his own in the days when his mother presided in his little farm house, was before his eyes too inviting. He never looked around to see if eyes were upon him, but stepping upon the little coop under the window that imprisoned a motherly hen with her chickens, he wearily drew himself into the room, but the hen's little prison was capsized and she went away with a joyful "cluck" to scratch for her brood.

Bernard attempted to unrobe himself but his fast failing strength cut short the operation, and half dressed, dirty and wet as he was, he dropped a filthy heap in a deep swoon upon the white bed.

CHAP. II.

The sun went down. The opal and gold gleams paled out in the horizon, while the stars peeped out sleepily and the slight crescent of the new moon began to show above the hills.

Mrs. Thurston had forgotten to shut down the window in her spare room opened after the rain had cleared up to admit a little of the clear, fresh air and Susie, her sweet-faced daughter, was sent to accomplish the task "and be sure to put down the green shade to keep out the sun to-morrow." It was only within the last year or two that Mrs. Thurston's message had admitted of a guest-chamber and Susie fully understood her mother's pride in the new acquisition. So she took up her lamp and entered and closed the spare room window with all proper respect to the august character of the apartment.

As she turned from the window her eyes fell upon the bed where Bernard Larkin had thrown himself. Susie's heart performed a wonderful gyration, but in a moment was again normal. A western girl was not to be intimidated by a sleeping stranger however clandestinely he had crept into his present position. But the young man's pale and suffering face set off by its clustering locks and silky beard of tawny hue touched the girl's tender nature and she went near the bed and spoke but without arousing him. She saw how ragged and filthy he was with a shudder as she thought of her mother's consternation at such a lodger in her best bed, but the worn, haggard face struck her with a strange awe. It had a noble beauty, a touching something that filled her eyes with pitying tears and taking her lamp she hurried away.

Her report alarmed and astonished the household who proceeded en masse to the now illustrious guest-room to behold this new arrival. Mr. Thurston after a proper examination declared the young man to be very ill, lying in a distinctly comatose state and threatened with a fever. Mrs. Thurston ready to cry with vexation at the sight her white coverlid presented, demanded to know what should be done.

Her liege lord who had a prudent regard for his wife's opinion quietly remarked, "I suppose Jock can harness up and take him over to Squire Dow's, who will have him put in the Alms House."

"But he might die on the way, or be treated as dreadfully as Jock's father was," with womanly tenderness. "Suppose we keep him to-night, I don't like to turn him out. How sick he looks."

Old Mrs. Thurston expressed fears that the young man's disease was a contagious one, but Mr. T. and Aunt Molly, the old family nurse, declared as their opinion that such fears might rest, and when Aunt Bel remarked that he had better be taken to the shed chamber, Mrs. Thurston had given orders for warm water and towels observing in conclusion, "He might as well stay here, everything is about as dirty as it can be." No one attempted to gainsay her words; she was mistress in the household.

And so they bathed and laid him on the bed. He partially aroused from his stupor and obediently swallowed a preparation that Aunt Molly was skilled in compounding and Mrs. Thurston possessed of boundless faith in administering. The household which this young man had so unceremoniously become an inmate of, consisted of many individuals.
